School Board Consents to McAuliffe Appointment

General's Sister Elected to Sousa Principalship as 3 Change Vote

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

Miss Eleanor P. McAuliffe was appointed principal of the new Sousa Junior High School yesterday.

The Board of Education, which two weeks ago turned down School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning's recommendation, approved her appointment by a 5-to-1 vote.

Three members, who previously were opposed, changed their vote.

Two explained Dr. Corning had clarified the procedure under which he selected Miss McAuliffe. Albert E. Steinem and Mrs. Edward C. Madgeburger said they hadn't understood the method by which a candidate was picked.

Mrs. Velma G. Williams at first refused to vote and then changed her mind. She said she was going along with the appointment because of a study now under way that will set up uniform procedure for selecting candidates. Dr. Corning submitted a progress report on the study to the board.

The one vote against Miss McAuliffe, now assistant principal of Paul Junior High School, was cast by Adelbert W. Lee, who at the earlier meeting led the fight against her.

Dr. Phillip Johnson, a Negro board member, who also had opposed the appointment, failed to vote yesterday.

Charges Discrepancies

Dr. Johnson said he will refuse to vote for any appointment as long as discrepancies exist in methods of selecting candidates in white and Negro schools.

The board's original refusal to approve Miss McAuliffe set off a series of protests by teacher groups and civic organizations.

Statements of the groups supported the right of the school head to select a candidate on the basis of qualifications without interference of board members.

The issue also precipitated one of the bitterest school board rows in years.

Board members debated the matter behind closed doors for more than an hour yesterday before they opened up the meeting and voted on the appointment.

Lee said that his vote against Miss McAuliffe was "no criticism of her ability."

"An Improper Divulgence"

He said he was prevented by law from giving his reasons for opposing her appointment. He referred to the law setting up the Board of Education which orders discussion of appointment of teachers to be held in closed meetings.

Lee declared release of information to the press on the qualifications of candidates for the Sousa

Hearings Ended On Plan to Extend Draft to 1954

The House Armed Services Committee yesterday wound up public hearings on President Truman's request for extension of the draft act until June, 1954.

Chairman Vinson (D., Ga.) said the committee will be glad to have written statements for or against the proposal.

He indicated the committee will be some time in making up its mind. The present draft act expires in June.

AEC Head Honored at Banquet

World Not on Brink of Ruin, Lilienthal's Goodby to Staff

A smiling, confident David E. Lilienthal asserted his belief last night that the world isn't at the brink of atomic "cataclysm and destruction in war."

For 400 sober-expressioned employes of the Atomic Energy Commission, gathered at the Hotel 2400 to say goodby to the AEC chairman two weeks before his retirement, Lilienthal had this message: "It's earlier than you think."

Lilienthal afterward explained that he was referring to "opportunity."

"Some people," he said, "think it's 11 o'clock at night. Actually, it's something closer to 1 o'clock in the morning."

Virginia Votes $45 Millions For Schools

By Richard Morris
Post Reporter

Richmond, Va., Feb. 1 — The Battle bill to give Virginia localities 45 million dollars for school construction passed both houses of the General Assembly today after a severe clubbing from advocates of local matching funds.

Attempts to require dollar-for-dollar outlays by cities and counties, offered in the form of amendments by Delegate Robert Whitehead of Nelson and Senator E. O. McCue of Charlottesville were killed by voice votes.

However, it was not until the amendments had found strong support, especially in the House, that the administration bill sailed through unshackled.

When the bill was put on its passage by dispensing with constitutional readings, the Senate supported it, 38 to 1, the House, 95 to 2.

McCue held out until the end in the upper chamber. Delegates Randolph R. Tucker and Albert O. Boscher, both of Richmond, voted "no" in the House.

Bills to Lift Oleo Tax Are Killed at Albany

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 1 (AP).—The Assembly agricultural committee today unanimously killed bills to lift State bans against the sale and manufacture of yellow oleo.

The action came in the face of Governor Dewey's flat stand in favor of repeal of the 60-year-old State ban against yellow oleomargarine.

Record Budget Asked by Lane In Maryland

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 1 (AP). — Governor Lane offered a record-smashing $143,066,052 budget for Maryland today.

It exceeds by $5,831,600 the 1950 budget, which controls expenditures until next June 30.

At the same time, the Governor assured the General Assembly there is enough money around that he can ask for cuts in both income taxes and real estate taxes. That is because on July 1 the State expects to have almost $6,500,000 more than has to be spent.

Income - tax reductions, Lane said, can be made by raising the allowances for dependents and increasing personal exemptions for old people. As for property-tax cuts, the State simply would reduce its share from 12.39 cents to 6 cents on the $100 valuation.

Lane recommended these total appropriations for the 1951 fiscal year, beginning July 1:

Warren Will Seek Both Nominations Against Roosevelt

Sacramento, Calif., Feb. 1 (AP).—California's Republican Gov. Earl Warren said today he will seek reelection for a third term.

The Governor's announcement threw him into a battle for the $25,000 a year job with Democrat James Roosevelt, Los Angeles, son of the late President Franklin Delano Roosevelt. Roosevelt announced his candidacy last November.

Both will seek nomination by each major party at the June 6 primary. This is permissible under California law.

State to Get $4 Million

Betting on Maryland Races Seen Rising to Half-Billion

Horseplayers will bet an estimated 500 million dollars on Maryland bangtails during the fiscal year starting July, 1950.

Of this half billion, only 100 million dollars will be bet at Maryland race tracks, and the State's take will be only $4,251,500, according to a prediction made yesterday by Gov. Preston W. Lane, jr., in his budget message.

The remaining 400 million dollars in bets will be placed with off-the-track bookmakers throughout the country, according to the latest estimates of the Chicago Crime Commission.

The commission estimates that for every dollar bet at a race track, four dollars are bet off the track.

If you take the word of another expert, the amount of money that will be bet on Maryland horses during fiscal 1951 may exceed the estimated half billion dollars.

Dr. Ernest E. Blanche, author of the book "You Can't Win," an expose of gambling odds, estimates that for every dollar bet on a race track, from $100 to $1000 may be bet off the track.

Speaking at a luncheon of the Columbia Club in the Sheraton Hotel yesterday, Dr. Blanche said "Authorities differ, but I estimate that between 100 and 1000 times as much money is bet with bookmakers as is bet at race tracks."

Governor Lane estimated that 100 million dollars would be bet at Maryland tracks in submitting his next year's fiscal budget to the Maryland General Assembly yesterday. One-mile tracks will record 70 million dollars in bets, he estimated, trotting and pacing tracks, 16 million dollars, asd County fair race meets, 14 million dollars.

Vandenberg Seeks Ban On Bombs

By the United Press

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.) said yesterday the United States should declare its willingness to halt work on the hydrogen superbomb immediately if Russia and other nations will agree to a dependable plan for outlawing such horrible weapons.

The Republican foreign policy leader threw his weight behind a growing congressional drive for dramatic new efforts to halt the atomic arms race which was given new impetus Tuesday by President Truman's decision to press development of a superbomb.

Like nearly all members of Congress, Vandenberg indorsed Mr. Truman's step as "unavoidable" as long as Russia is blocking international control of atomic energy and probably trying to build an H-bomb of its own.

Would Notify U. N. at Once

But Vandenberg said he hopes the President will "immediately notify the United Nations of our intent and purpose to suspend all of our activities in respect to mass destruction the first moment the use of these weapons can be dependably outlawed."

Mr. Truman on Tuesday ordered the Atomic Energy Commission to push work on all atomic weapons, including the H-bomb, "until" effective international controls are established. But he gave no indication the Administration planned a new approach to Russia on the deadlocked control question.

The Soviet Union and its Communist satellites in eastern Europe are the only nations in the world that have balked at the United States proposal for veto-proof curbs on atomic weapons.

And Mr. Truman said recently that the United States would not abandon its plan for any less effective system, which might be more dangerous than no controls at all since dictatorships could violate the curbs at will.

The feeling of many Congressmen that this ominous deadlock must somehow be broken was expressed in a House speech by Representative Henry M. Jackson (D., Wash.), a member of the congressional Atomic Energy Committee.

On Knife-Edge of History

"The President's decision has placed us on a knife-edge of history," he said. "With almost equal ease, we could fall either into mass destruction or into a condition of active peace instead of our present condition of inactive war."

Deciding how to use the potential of the H-bomb to bring about true peace, Jackson said, is "the greatest test to which democratic

Truman Gags Officials On H-Bomb Activities

Along with his decision to proceed with construction of the H-bomb, President Truman clamped down a complete gag on the subject among Federal officials concerned with it, it was learned yesterday.

The secrecy rule, characterized as tight as any that existed in the war, forbids any and all discussion by Government officials of the H-bomb. It specifies that further comment, if any, will come from the White House.

Russian Note Asks Trial Of Hirohito

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

Soviet Ambassador Alexander S. Panyushkin handed Secretary Acheson a 22-page note yesterday demanding the trial of Emperor Hirohito and other Japanese as war criminals.

His visit to the Secretary's office lasted only seven minutes, which suggested that neither of the two men was talkative or anxious to discuss current Soviet-American problems.

The note appeared to be an indirect answer to American demands for the return of Japanese prisoners of war from Soviet camps. Hundreds of thousands have been returned since V-J Day, but the United States claims that 376,929 are still being held—whether alive or dead or ill and starving, nobody knows.

Concerns 12 Japanese

Panyushkin himself disclosed the subject matter of the Soviet note; State Department officials were still translating it last night, and declined to comment on it. The Ambassador told reporters it concerned 12 Japanese recently tried in Khabarovsk by Soviet courts.

"You have heard about these war criminals," he said. "These war criminals wanted to use bacteriological weapons. The purpose of the note is to try some more war criminals."

A reporter asked whether the Emperor was one of those wanted for trial.

"Da, da," (yes, yes,) the Ambassador answered, and his interpreter, Alexander I. Zinchuk, third secretary of the Soviet Embassy, added, "Yes, the Emperor is one of those."

There is not the sightest prospect—and the Russians know it—of getting a reversal of the present policy toward Hirohito. Technically the 11-nation Far Eastern Commission could order his prosecution, but the United States could always veto such a move.

The Soviet note on Japan may also have been a part of the current Soviet political and propaganda drive in Asia, which last week produced Soviet recognition of the revolutionary Ho Chi-minh regime fighting the French in Indo-China.

Acheson Calls It Surprise

Earlier yesterday, at his weekly press conference, Secretary Acheson had hit back at the Soviet recognition, which he described as a "surprise."

He said it "should remove any illusions as to the 'nationalist' nature of Ho Chi-minh's aims and reveals Ho in his true colors as the mortal enemy of native independence in Indo-China."

Ever since the Japanese surrender, Ho has pictured himself as leader of a genuine independence movement. Soviet broadcasts throughout Asia have fostered this belief, and Chinese Communist broadcasts have been weak echoes of the Kremlin

Acheson went on to say that Soviet recognition of Ho had been "timed in an effort to cloud the transfer of sovereignty by France" to the new regime headed by former Emperor Bao Dai.

And he foreshadowed early recognition of Bai Dai's "legal" government "by the countries of the world whose policies support the development of genuine national independence in former colonial areas."

'Superiority' Meaningless

H-Bomb Armament Makes 25 Equal 100

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter
(The third of a series)

At first glance, it seems absurd even to raise the question of how good a weapon the new hydrogen bomb will be, or of how much value it has for the United States.

No one disputes the fact of its fabulous destructive power, 10 or 20 or 100 times, or as many times as you like, more devastating than the already hideous plutonium bomb. How can anyone doubt, then, the enormous military advantage it gives to the country that has it?

But that first glance is deceptive, or at least not the whole story. People do doubt the military advantage it is supposed to provide.

It is exactly this point, in fact, that was the heart of the intra-administration dispute that preceded Mr. Truman's announcement on Tuesday.

It was this point that led to doubts by three members of the Atomic Energy Commission on the wisdom of deciding, flat-footed, to go ahead with H-bomb production.

It was this point that brought forth the unanimous report of the AEC's General Advisory Committee in opposition to an immediate decision to make the weapon.

The doubters' arguments were many and varied, but this line of reasoning was common to most of them:

Suppose—and the facts force one to suppose—that in the course of months or years Russia also develops the H-bomb. Given enough time, just a few years, our "superiority" in these weapons, if we ever have it, or even if we still have it, becomes unavailing. For "superiority" in respect of such a weapon is a meaningless term.

This is because the mathematics of H-bombs is as far removed from conventional arithmetic as nuclear physics is from the 19th Century variety. That is to say, criteria of numerical or qualitative superiority do not apply.

Other things being equal, a nation that has more or better hand grenades than its enemy can be said to be better armed. But if we have 100 H-bombs and Russia has only 25, the curious fact is that 25 equals 100.

Russia's 25, assuming they can be delivered, would be ample to destroy the war-making potential—indeed, the physical fabric—of America. And they would kill so many millions that the United States as we know it, free, produc-

In Talks With MacArthur

U. S. Joint Chiefs Hear Plea For Greater Pacific Strength

Tokyo, Feb. 1 (AP).—The United States must throw more air, sea and land power into its Pacific line if it is to hold back Asia's Communist tide, the Joint Chiefs of Staff were told today.

Trustworthy informants said General MacArthur's highest commanders presented that view in the first full-dress conference with the Chiefs of Staff, now on a tour of Pacific installations.

MacArthur's officers argued that Asia must be considered part of a global military picture. They feel the Pacific is considered a secondary area in United States strategy.

The visiting Chiefs of Staff knew MacArthur's views before they came. He had sent them a secret report more than a year ago asking for reinforcements all along the line of the armed services. He had forwarded many similar reports since.

Now, his men on the spot in personal contact with America's military planners could say they felt the situation had grown alarmingly worse.

Air Force Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg is scheduled to visit nearby air bases Thursday. The other three top officers will visit the United States naval base at Yokosuka, 40 miles south of Tokyo.

Fechteler Takes Over

Mo Floated, 3 Leaks in Hull; Drydocked, Soon to Join Fleet

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 1.—High water, a fair wind, and improved salvage technique put the "Mighty Mo" back afloat again today. Without a shudder or perceptible scrape, the huge battleship came out of the sand of Timble Shoals at 7:09 a. m.—apparently suffering no real hurt from its two weeks' stranding.

Rear Admiral Allen F. Smith, in charge of salvage operations, immediately radioed Admiral William H. P. Blandy, commander-in-chief of the Atlantic Fleet, that the USS Missouri, except for three leaks in its bottom, seemed undamaged.

Before nightfall, the Navy's only active battleship was drydocked at the shipyard here for detailed examination. Some pontoons still fast to the hull delayed completion of the docking but Rear Admiral Homer N. Wallin, yard commander, predicted the vessel will take part in the Caribbean maneuvers this month.

'It's a Great Day'

"Unless the damage is considerably greater than we judge now, she should be out of the yard within a week or 10 days," said Wallin, deputy chief of the salvage operation.

Capt. W. D. Brown, skipper of the Missouri, told reporters: "It's a great day."

Less than two hours after the huge battlewagon came off the reef, Admiral Blandy turned over command of the fleet to Adm. William Morrow Fechteler and retired from the Navy.

Just as Blandy was telling assembled staff officers and the crew of the USS F. D. Roosevelt how happy he was to hand over the helm of the fleet "with all ships afloat," the Missouri swept close

Bevin Is Target Of Rotten Eggs From Naples Mob

Rome, Feb. 1 (U.P.).—Communists bombarded British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin with rotten eggs in Naples today while Reds here demonstrated at the American Embassy against United States military aid to Italy.

Headquarters of the Communist Party called for nation-wide leftist demonstrations against the American aid program under the Atlantic Pact.

Bevin, en route home from the meeting of British Commonwealth foreign ministers at Colombo, Ceylon, was the target of rotten eggs thrown from a crowd of several hundred Communist youths when he landed at Naples from the British cruiser Birmingham. The eggs splattered Bevin's car without actually hitting him.

The egg-throwing occurred as the Foreign Minister, looking ill and tired, started out by car to Rome for conferences with Premier Alcide de Gasperi and Foreign Minister Count Carlo Sforza and a courtesy visit with Pope Pius XII.

Road Backed As D. C. War Escape Route

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Thomas H. MacDonald, U. S. Public Roads Commissioner, yesterday urged that the Federal Government pay the full cost of an 18-mile portion of the Washington-Baltimore Parkway to strengthen the defenses of the Capital, and facilitate evacuation of the population if necessary in time of war.

MacDonald made the appeal to the House Public Works Committee in testifying for a bill to authorize finishing the parkway project at a Federal cost estimated between 13 and 15 million dollars, for the part of the road from Washington to Fort Meade.

Whether Maryland should assume part of that expense was queried by Representative Tom Pickett (D., Tex.) and it brought this comment from MacDonald:

"My own personal view is this: The National Capital has an interest in these parkways. In emergency, the National Capital would be the focus of attack. We are designing these parkways to be beautiful, as is the Mount Vernon Memorial Parkway, and also to carry the heaviest traffic that might be necessary in terms of ordnance and other equipment. D. C. Air Mechanic Held Responsible For Death of Boy

Gettysburg, Pa., Feb. 1 (Spl.).—A mechanic for Capital Airlines at Washington, Paul Luckenbaugh, was held responsible by a coroner's jury here today for a freak back-yard accident in which a plane propeller killed a 7-year-old boy.

Luckenbaugh, who lives at Littlestown, Pa., near here, and at 704 S. 18th st., Arlington, was testing the motor on his wingless ship last Wednesday. According to testimony, it snapped a light mooring rope, careened across the back yard, and cut off an arm and leg of the boy, Richard S. Ritter.

The jury said the accident was caused by Luckenbaugh's "failure to use reasonable safety precautions in anchoring the plane."

Symington Warns of Attack

Red Military Forces Declared World's Biggest in 3 Branches

Waco, Tex., Feb. 1 (AP).—Secretary of the Air Force Symington today said that Communist "dictators" now have "the world's largest ground army, air force and undersea fleet."

And he voiced a somber warning that Russia is capable of launching a surprise atomic attack—"against which we have no sure defense"—on any part of the United States.

The Air Force Secretary painted what he called a "bleak picture" in a speech at Baylor University's midyear graduation exercises.

"Those who reiterate America must be destroyed," he said, "now have:

"1. A ground army greater in numbers than the combined armies of the United States and its allies.

"2 An air force whose strength in nearly all categories is now the largest in the world and growing relatively larger month by month.

"3. The world's largest submarine fleet; and an intensive submarine development and construction program."

The Air Force Secretary expressed the belief that if any democracy attempted to maintain in peacetime a comparable regular armed force, "the free economy of that democracy would be wrecked."

"Here are three facts which every American should know," Symington said, "because this is the world in which we live:

"(1) Behind the Iron Curtain there has been an atomic explosion. (2) Behind that curtain is the air equipment capable of delivering a surprise atomic attack against any part of the United

State Totals Would Be Split Among Candidates

Rollcall Is 64 to 27; House Passage Would Send Amendment To the Legislatures

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The Senate yesterday voted to junk the 145-year-old present electoral college method of choosing the President and Vice President.

In its place—if the proposed constitutional amendment wins a two-thirds House vote and approval by 36 State legislatures—would go a new system which both friend and foe agree would have a vast effect on the way the United States chooses its Chief Executives, and perhaps on the political alignment within this Nation.

More Than Two-Thirds Vote

By a 64-to-27 vote—three more than the necessary two-thirds—the Senate approved the Lodge-Gossett resolution to put before the States this system of choosing the President and Vice President:

1. Each State would have its electoral votes computed as at present: the total of its membership in the House plus two votes representing its two Senators. House membership is based on population.

2. But instead of the high man winning all the State's electoral votes under the present unit or winner-take-all rule, each State's electoral votes would be divided on the same basis as its popular votes are divided, down to the nearest thousandth.

3. The electoral count of each State would be forwarded to a joint session of Congress which would add up the votes. If the top candidate received 40 percent of the electoral vote, he would be named President.

4. But if no candidate reached 40 percent, then the Congress, sitting in joint session with each member of House and Senate having one vote, would choose the President from the top two candidates. A majority of the total membership, 266 out of 531, would be necessary to elect.

Electors Would Disappear

Under this system the current presidential electors would disappear and there no longer would be a chance that an elector would vote contrary to the popular vote in his State.

On yesterday's roll call, the amendment was approved in a jammed Senate chamber by a curious alignment of senatorial votes. Only four Democrats (Byrd and Robertson of Virginia, Johnson of Colorado, and Thomas of Oklahoma) opposed the amendment while 46 voted for it.

But the Republicans split almost down the middle—18 voting with Lodge and 23 against him. Core of the opposition was the argument

Big Landslide Grinds Down on Prison Coal Mines

Petros, Tenn., Feb. 1 (AP).—A mile-long landslide above the Brushy Mountain State prison grounds spread over a section of the prison grounds today, and put two coal mines out of operation.

The slide, from 25 to 100 feet wide, pulled down boulders, trees and old timbers from the prison-operated coal mines in a ponderous half-mile journey in seven hours.

From the face of the 3500-foot mountain, the slide closed entrances to two of the prison's three mines, which together produce 300 to 400 tons of coal a day.

Although still moving slowly, the mass of rubble was being diverted by heavy timbers pulled up as deflectors, Deputy Warden Arnett Booth said.

The main prison, housing about 750 prisoners, was not threatened.

Denfeld May Head Port of Boston Authority

Boston, Feb. 1 (U.P.).—Admiral Louis E. Denfeld may be appointed director of the Port of Boston Authority, the office of Gov. Paul A. Dever said today.

The deposed Chief of Naval Operations visited the Governor today for the second time in three weeks. He submitted his retirement request to the Navy on January 19.

Denfeld, who retires from the Navy March 1, refused to comment as he left the Governor's office. The Governor's personal secretary told reporters the pair had conferred "about an appointment as director of the Port of Boston Authority."

Southern Filibuster Aids FEPC Chances

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

A Southern filibuster against House "Calendar Wednesday" legislation actually worked in reverse to ward off a serious blow to the Administration's FEPC bill yesterday.

What the Dixie Democrats didn't know was that House Labor Chairman John Lesinski (D., Mich.), the only member empowered to call up the FEPC bill, was absent from the House under a court summons to appear at the Chistoffel perjury trial.

By dropping their filibuster, and speeding the calendar Wednesday "call of committees," they could have by-passed the FEPC bill for possibly the balance of the session.

Only three committees, all of them headed by Southern or border State chairmen, had priority over Lesinski's House Labor group when the House convened yesterday for its weekly call of committees having legislation to present. Once a committee is called and "passed," it has to take its place at the end of the line, and wait months for another opportunity.

House Banking Chairman Brent Spence (D., Ky.) had yesterday's "priority," and claimed it to call up a minor bill to accelerate retirement of Government-owned capital in Federal home-loan banks.

Southern strategists decided to string out debate on the bill as long as possible, to avert recognition of the two other committees remaining as a buffer between the FEPC bill and a House showdown.

While FEPC advocates sweated, lest Lesinski's absence be discovered, Southern Democrats kept the quorum bells ringing. Late in the day Southern floor managers permitted Spence's bill to pass, then quickly moved for adjournment to forestall any more committee calls.

Surprisingly the worried FEPC advocates did not object. The Southern strategists found out why later,

The two committee chairmen still having "Calendar Wednesday" priority over Lesinski and the FEPC bill are House Civil Service Chairman Tom Murray (D, Tenn.) and House District Chairman John L. McMillan (D., S. C.).

If each chairman holds the floor for a full Wednesday, Lesinski can call up his FEPC bill on February 22

While the House was playing at quorum calls, torn FEPC ranks began to patch up their differences.

First, Representative Adam Clayton Powell, jr. (D., N. Y.) who last week filed a second FEPC discharge petition after a floor tiff with Represnetative Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr. (Dem.-Lib., N. Y.), went up to the Rostrum and signed Roosevelts discharge petition

Next, Roosevelt told reporters he had signed Powell's petition last week. He said his offer to withdraw his own petition if Powell receives a "substantial" number of Republican signatures still holds good. Last night Roosevelt's petition had a total of 99 signatures and Powell's had 52.

Then Powell addressed two sets of letters to House members.

Powell's new letter to GOP members said "a mistake has arisen concerning my former letter."

"I did not then, or at any other time, have any intention of creating any misunderstanding concerning FEPC," he wrote. "The fight for FEPC must be a bi-partisan one and your support as a Republican is needed and will be appreciated by all."

Then Powell sent a circular letter to House Democrats requesting them also to sign his discharge petition. "Let us keep the FEPC ball rolling," it said.

Msgr. O'Grady Asks Benefits For All Aged

Post Reporter

Extension of Federal old-age benefits to all aged people and curtailing of increases in aid to dependent children was recommended yesterday by the National Conference of Catholic Charities.

In a statement for the Senate Finance Committee the Rt. Rev. Msgr. John O'Grady, conference secretary, recommended that all aged people should be protected by old age benefits whether or not they have paid into the plan.

If all widows and orphans were brought in under Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, Monsignor O'Grady said, there would be a total of 7,800,000 persons. At the minimum of $25 a month that would mean an annual expenditure of $2,340,000,000. If each were to be paid $600 a year, it would mean an expenditure of $4,680,000,000.

"Under universal coverage in Old-Age and Survivors Insurance, the system could be set up on a pay-as-you-go basis," the Catholic leader said. "This would mean that each generation would be brought face to face with the cost of maintaining its own aged. It would mean that any improvement made by Congress in the system would be immediately reflected in the budget estimates that would be submitted each year."

Monsignor O'Grady cited the growing criticism of the administration of Aid to Dependent Children in many cities. Local investigations, he said, have brought to light cases in which mothers have entered into collusion with fathers about their disappearing from the home.

Another witness on the House-passed bill to expand Social Security coverage represented the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, a union ousted by the CIO last fall as Communist-dominated.

Martin Sees No Income Tax Cut for Years

Baltimore, Feb. 1 (AP).—Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., (R., Mass.), Republican leader of the House today predicted there will be no income tax cut for many years.

He sharply criticized red-ink spending of the Democratic administration and pointed out that the last income tax reduction was passed by a Republican Congress in 1948 over three presidential vetoes.

"I make the prediction today," he said in an address to the Advertising Club of Baltimore, "that that tax reduction will stand for many years as the last income-tax reduction enacted by an American Congress."

He attacked as benefiting no one the "inflation program now clearly mapped out," and said President Truman's prediction of $12,000 average income in the year 2000 didn't calculate what the dollar would then be worth.

"If the purchasing power of the American dollar falls off as much in the next 50 years as it has in the last 50, it will be worth about 18 cents," he declared.

"Then the $12,000 income for each family will represent $2160 in 1939 purchasing power."

Scandinavian Housing Work Tops America's, Senators Say

America is lagging behind the Scandinavian countries and Holland in providing adequate housing for its citizens, a Senate Banking and Currency subcommittee reparted yesterday.

While the report avoided indorsing the Administration's middle-income plan for cooperative housing in this country, the subcommittee is expected to give early approval to the Administration bill.

The report called attention to the fact that the slums in war-torn Europe were not so bad as many in the United States.

Cooperative Aid Urged

Meanwhile on the House side the American Legion and the Jewish War Veterans urged the House Banking Committee to approve legislation giving Government help to housing cooperatives of middle income families.

Representative Brooks Hays (D., Ark.) introduced a bill to prevent wholesale evictions from Government-owned veterans housing projects. Present law requires this housing to be "removed" by January 1, 1951. Hays said his bill would let the Government transfer the projects to local authorities who could permit the tenants to remain. He said nearly all the projects are now 100 percent occupied and in many cases the tenants have no place to move.

The five Senators who toured Europe as a housing subcommittee are Senators John Sparkman (D., Ala.), Burnet R. Maybank (D., S. C.), Allen Frear, jr. (D., Del.), Ralph Flanders (R., Vt.) and John Bricker (R., Ohio).

The report on European housing apparently was intended to serve as background for arguments that will come on the Administration's move to aid cooperatives here.

Six Points Emphasized

These points were emphasized in the report:

1. The European countries and cities which were visited apparently have done a better job of eliminating or cleaning up slums than this country, including this Capital City of Washington.
2. "Every country is still continuing its wartime rent controls" in Europe.
3. "The chief advantages claimed for cooperatives in addition to their ability to get low interest rates and long term amortization loans are their ability to erect large-scale projects with all the advantages of mass purchasing and mass construction."
4. Prefabricated housing and cooperatives have made their greatest strides in Sweden.
5. The average Englishman has little use for either and "will always prefer a brick house with a little brick wall around it."
6. Private housing, as distinguished from Government subsidies for cooperative and municipal housing, continues to make progress in Europe, "and in most countries during the last year the volume of private construction has increased sharply."

6 Governors Chart GOP Policy

Harrisburg, Pa., Feb. 1 (AP).—Six Republican governors today drew up a blueprint of principles for the Republican Party, declaring it would make the GOP "a party of victories instead of defeats."

Joining in the statement were Govs. James H. Duff, Pennsylvania; Fred G. Aandahl, North Dakota; Sherman Adams, New Hampshire; William S. Beardsley, Iowa; Val Peterson, Nebraska, and C. A. Robins, of Idaho.

The suggestions will be discussed at a GOP policy meeting in Washington on February 5.

Any GOP policy, the governors said, should be drawn up with the idea of ending "the dangerous deficit inflationary policies, excess spending and extra heavy taxes of the present Administration."

The State executives also urged that the GOP program should approach individual issues one at a time, explaining:

"The Republican program should focus upon a few of the most important issues and upon fundamental principles, rather than be scattered over the entire range of governmental question."

The governors urged that invitations be extended to veterans, farmers, young men and women, and "independent and true liberal voters" to offer suggestions on detailed policies of the Republican Party.

Unit Investigating 'Five Percenters' Granted $100,000

By The Associated Press

The Senate yesterday authorized another $100,000 for further probes by its special investigating subcommittee into so-called "5 percenters" and other "operations of Government activities."

Senator Hoey (D., N. C.) heads the investigation group which has announced plans for a new inquiry into 5-percenter deals and alleged kickbacks to foreign purchasers using Marshall Plan funds.

The Senate also voted another $108,000 for continuance of the Labor Committee's study of the entire field of labor-management relations, and an additional $38,000 for an Agriculture subcommittee's investigation of crop production and utilization.

2 U. S. Offices Struggle With Potato Problem

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

Two offices at the Department of Agriculture were busy yesterday. One was studying ways to destroy 50 million bushels of potatoes bought under the Government price-support program. The other was drawing up next year's potato purchase program.

The Senate Agriculture Committee virtually gave the Department a green light to destroy stocks it must buy in the next few days. These total between 40 and 50 million bushels, and will cost from 50 to 70 million dollars, plus the cost of destroying them.

Last night is was stated that about 20 ways to get rid of the spuds—the greatest willful destruction of food in recorded history—have been worked out. All cost money. They range from using gasoline to burn them, to oil to taint them, or chemicals to color and make them unfit for human use.

One Senator, George D. Aiken (R., Vt.), suggested that they be plowed under on the land where they were harvested. They have a value as fertilizer, Aiken believes.

The committee's decision came after an all-morning closed session which reports said was marked by violent debate. In essence, it was a decision to do nothing.

Meanwhile the National Potato Council sent telegrams to members of the House and Senate Agriculture Committees urging them to give Brannan their "positive views . . . on wholesale destruction" in order to escape being "branded by the secretary's dumping policy."

The council said it "heartily agreed" that disposal of the surplus was properly an "administrative decision." But it warned the committee's action might be construed as "tacit approval" of Brannan's plan and bring "highly adverse public opinion" down on its head.

It suggested "an industrial use" be found for the spuds.

It is up to Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan to decide, Chairman Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.) told newsmen. Brannan the day before had told the committee that "unless the Congress directs us to do otherwise" he would order them destroyed.

The only alternative, he said, was to make industrial use of them—either as starch, potato flour, commercial alcohol, etc. If used for commercial alcohol, they would be replacing blackstrap molasses, now imported.

The destruction won't take place without a fight, potato men declared.

The National Potato Council sent out a call for its members to meet at the Willard Hotel Saturday. They made a last-minute appeal to the committee not to permit such wholesale destruction—an appeal the committee ignored.

Equally as important are the plans for Maine's Republican Senator Owen Brewster. Brewster is loaded with statistics, showing that the State Department, under a reciprocal trade treaty with Canada, is permitting 20 million bushels of Canadian potatoes to be imported this year—twice the amount that came in legally last year, and several times the average rate.

In other words, Brewster alleges, this country is subsidizing Canadian potato growers to the extent of 30 million dollars. Canadians, just across the Maine border, he said, this year increased their acreage in about the same proportion as the American growers reduced theirs.

Department potato men haven't decided yet whether to start dumping as fast as they buy the potatoes—half of the total will be destroyed in Maine—or to make one big orgy out of it.

Last-minute efforts are being made to try to step up exports. However, outside of minor shipments to the Carribean, to South America, and to Africa, potatoes have never figured largely in our exports. Just after the war a lot were sent to Occupied Areas in Germany, where they are a diet staple. However, Germany, Poland, Czechoslovakia and other central and eastern European countries have regained their prewar production and now have no need for any.

Paris, Feb. 1 (AP).—Russia curtly rejected France's protest over Communist-riven Indo-China today, hardly taking a look at it.

A French diplomatic source said French-Russian "relations were never worse in recent years."

The French note protesting that Russia's recognition of Ho was encouragement of a rebel and a grave impairment of French-Soviet relations was handed to Soviet Ambassador Alexander Bogomolov last night.

Hardly 18 hours later, Bogomolov handed the note back, saying "the government of the USSR does not consider it possible to receive such a note."

The French did not let the matter rest, however. The French Foreign Office asked Bogomolov to call Thursday to explain his action.

At the same time the National Assembly's overseas territories committee called on the cabinet to "define its attitude" toward Russia. Communist members walked out of the committee meeting. The resolution said Russia's action violated the French-Soviet friendship treaty Gen. Charles de Gaulle signed in 1944.

Dispatches through the censorship screen in Indo-China, where Ho has been fighting a hit-and-run jungle war for more than three years, said 200 Vietnamese were killed yesterday in a battle with French troops at Hue, on Communist China's border. French casualties were estimated at 20.

States. (3) We have no sure defense against such an attack."

At another point, he warned:

"Remember Russian soil is but five minutes' flying time from American soil in Alaska; and but a few hours from our great cities. Waco is but an 18-hour flight from Moscow for the bombers we know Russia is now producing in quantity."

Returning again and again to the subject of Russian military might and "communist aggresion," Symington appealed for support of national spending programs for the armed forces.

Fears Year-by-Year Gain

"If reports received from behind the Iron Curtain are correct," he said, "in a short time Russia will be at its strongest position in armaments . . . That position will increase steadily year by year.

"So I say today that further reduction in our payment for national security is unthinkable."

Symington drew a parallel between America's present position in relation to Russia with that of England to Germany at the outbreak of World War II and added:

"At this point let me ask you—in case our country in turn is caught with its defense guard down, what nation has the strength to stand behind us as we stood behind England?"

"MO" FLOATS AGAIN—The USS Missouri, floating once again, is towed into the Navy drydock at Portsmouth, Va., after being freed from Hampton Roads mudflat. A "talker" (right), directs towline handlers. Any damage will be determined later by his flagship on its way to the yard.

Mighty Mo Refloated; Goes to Drydock

Success came on the fifth attempt to pull the big ship off the Chesapeake Bay shoal.

Change in Tactics

It followed the same general "strategy" contemplated from the start, but differed "tactically," Admiral Smith said.

The basic plan involved: (1) Increasing the Missouri's buoyancy and decreasing her displacement by removing ammunition, etc, and raising her with pontoons and removing sand beneath the hull; (2) pulling with tugs, salvage ships and beach gear (hauling on fixed anchors with winches aboard ship) and (3) dredging an exit channel to deep water.

Today's "pull" succeeded where Tuesday's attempt failed, officials said, for these reasons: (1) a tide higher than any day since the vessel grounded. A favorable wind—blowing about 10 knots from northward, blew more water into the bay from the Atlantic. Recent rains, filling the Chesapeake and its tributaries, possibly helped.

(2) The removal of some 900 tons from the bow and use of additional pontoons raised the bow and lowered the stern. For Tuesday's pull, the stern was raised and weight put back forward to lower the bow, and the ship stayed stuck.

Tugs' Power Alternated

(3) Concentrating the pull on a sideways, whipsawing motion instead of a dead haul astern. Tugs alternated pulling the bow port and then starboard, and the beaching gear was tautened first on one side and then the other.

(4) Better teamwork in pulling and maneuvering, due to lack of fog and the benefit of Tuesday's rehearsal.

Thus the weight of the tide computation clicking and "Lady Luck" smiling, the Mo came afloat 15 minutes before high tide.

The big ship started seaward down the prepared exit channel, stern foremost, just missing the aft tugs. A tug lashed to the Missouri's port bow, in fact, sideswiped the salvage craft USS Windlass, but the damage was negligible.

After the big vessel floated clear, Smith ran up a signal reading "Reporting for duty." The ship's band, burst into "The Missouri Waltz," "Anchors Aweigh" and "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen."

At an impromptu press conference shortly thereafter, Admiral Smith commented "I don't care what anyone says, we have a very efficient Navy and Atlantic Fleet."

Six pontoons—two on the bow and four on the stern—14 tugs, two salvage ships, and nine bear gear sets were used in the operation. This was two pontoons and one tug more than employed Tuesday.

There was only one minor casualty aboard the Missouri today. Seaman Ezra G. Huffman of Staunton, Va. suffered a bruise on his thigh when a hawser snapped and hit him.

Comdr. James A. Murphy, 2745 Ordway st. nw. the Mo's surgeon, said there were only two prior injuries aboard the ship during the two weeks salvage operations. One was a broken finger and the other a broken toe. Sick call also was lighter than usual despite the long hours of work and occassional zero weather, he said.

Smith said the court of inquiry into the grounding will open sessions Saturday at the Atlantic Fleet headquarters ashore here.

Dickinson, N. Dak., Feb. 1 (U.P.) Flames routed 81 guests and 9 employes from the St. Charles Hotel today. The hotel was destroyed.

Fireman Ole Olbinder suffered minor injuries, and a guest, Radenbald Knutson, 64, Mandan, N. Dak., was hospitalized with frostbite and possible injuries after leaping nude from his room to the roof of an adjoining building.

British Modify Stand to Ease Oil Deadlock

The long British-American deadlock over oil seemed broken yesterday by the new proposals submitted by the British government on Tuesday.

American officials who have studied the British proposals now believe they give ample room for bargaining, even though in their present form they will not satisfy the American oil companies or the Administration.

Secretary Acheson made it clear yesterday that the Administration still wants to help the British save some of the 700 million dollars they are spending every year on "dollar oil"—that is, oil that comes from American companies, or which otherwise costs dollars in its production or distribution.

'It is our view," Acheson told his weekly press conference, "that measures can be adopted which will meet the necessity of the United Kingdom and the sterling area to save dollars on oil account and at the same time protect the legitimate interests of the countries and companies concerned."

There is no dispute over the British need to save dollars; the Administration acknowledged this need last September, and promised to help find a remedy.

The real dispute was over the British order of December 21, drastically limiting dollar oil imports into the United Kingdom, and extending this effort to the dominions and other countries that base their currencies on sterling.

Acheson said yesterday that "the British action was taken without adequate consultation with American companies," and that the British were informed of the "serious concern" of the Administration at the time of the December 21 order.

Discussions Planned

He also said the Administration intended "to press forward with discussions" aimed at saving dollars for the British and yet protecting American interests. This, presumably, was his answer to Tuesday's angry demand by Senator Tom Connally (D., Tex.) for Administration action.

Chairman Eugene J. Keogh (D., N. Y.) of a House subcommittee on oil has announced he would summon State Department and ECA officials to hearings beginning February 7 on the British oil decree.

The essence of the new British proposals, it was learned yesterday, is a promise not to go further in cutting imports of dollar oil during the life of the Marshall Plan—that is, until 1952. Before the British order, American companies expected to sell 13 million tons of oil annually in the sterling area.

Sales would be cut to nine million tons on the basis of the British decree and parallel action in other sterling countries. The British now promise not to go below the nine-million-ton figure.

May Sell Above Total

The British also propose to relax gasoline rationing to some extent, and to give American oil companies a strictly limited share of the larger market thus created. This would let the Americans sell somewhat more than the nine-million total.

New Electoral Plan Approved by Senate of Senator Taft (R., Ohio) that the GOP would lose more than it would gain under the new system.

One Republican Senator, who votes conservatively and usually follows the Taft lead, explained his vote this way:

"The Republicans have tried everything else without winning. I'm willing to give this one a try, too."

Proposals Defeated

Before the final vote, the Senate took these roll calls:

It voted down, 60 to 31 and 63 to 28, two versions of a direct popular vote for President, without regard to State lines. One proposal came from Senator Langer (R., N. Dak.) and the other from Senator Humphrey (D., Minn.).

Then it turned down, 67 to 23, a proposal to count within the States only the electoral votes of the two top men. Finally, it turned down, 71 to 20, a substitute by Senator Ferguson (R., Mich.) to abolish the electoral college but keep the unit of winner-take-all system of counting a State's electoral votes.

At a two-hour conference before the Senate met, Republican members argued over the effect of the amendment on their party's presidential prospects. Taft, Ferguson and others argued that the present-day lopsided Democratic majorities in the South would give the Democrats an even bigger headstart than they now enjoy through the bloc of "solid South" votes on which they normally count.

Lodge and Others Disagreed

But Lodge, Smith of New Jersey; Cain of Washington and others argued that the GOP would gain by opening the South to a two-party system.

This is the argument on how that would come about, an event which political scientists have been calling for practically since the Civil War:

Today the only election battles in the South are those in the Democratic primary. The general election is just a formality. Yet in 1948 Gov. Thomas E. Dewey got more popular votes in the Soutn than did Governor J. Strum Thurmond, the Dixiecrat candidate. Hence, it is obvious there is a base of Republicanism already in existence.

If the GOP knew it would have counted in terms of electoral votes all the popular votes it could get in the South, instead of having them ignored as in the past, then the party would really do some campaigning down South. Since the South is the more conservative part of the Democratic Party, the GOP should stand to gain votes of dissident Democrats, once that they know it would be worthwhile to vote Republican and not just a waste of a vote.

Taft's Argument

Taft argued, however, that the Republicans can never carry the big States—he cited his own Ohio—by any such great margin as the Democrats now roll up in the South. Hence, he reasoned, the GOP would be throwing away big northern blocs of votes—assuming they could get a bare majority in those States—for a gamble down South.

On the Democratic side the arguments were of a different character.

The almost solid Southern vote—except for Virginia's two Senators—was an expression, it was clear, of the feeling that under the system the Democratic Party would have to pay more attention to the South. They figured it this way:

South's Vote "In the Bag"

Today the party leaders start out by figuring they have the South's vote in the bag and therefore show it no favors, in platform, patronage, campaign expenditures or in naming the ticket.

What is even worse, the party chiefs pay great attention to the small pressure groups in the north, such as the Negro or labor, who are supposed to be able to "swing" the big electoral blocs in such States as New York by the weight of relatively small number of votes.

Thus, the Southerners say, the party has become beholden to the pressure groups. But under the new amendment, they feel, no one could "swing" any bloc of votes because there no longer would be winner-take-all blocs.

Senator Maybank (D., S. C.) put it to a reporter this way:

"We lost our influence when we lost the two-thirds rule (for nominating a Presidential candidate) at the party convention. Now we would have real weight in the party again."

U. S. Urged to Save Water

The United States must conserve its water resources if crises are to be avoided.

This was the statement last night of Dr. Albert Nelson Sayre, chief of the ground water branch of the U. S. Geological Survey. He addressed a meeting of the Washington Society of Engineers at the Cosmos Club.

Dr. Sayre said that the shortage in New York City is only temporary, but stresses the need for conservation.

Water supplies over the Nation, he said, have remained generally constant but use has increased from a few gallons per capita a century ago to an estimated 700 gallons per person per day now. No increase in water supply is in sight, he said. He added:

"Agriculture, industry, and municipal uses are in competition. Flood control, hydroelectric power, drainage, wildlife, and water supply require management and controls of different kinds and objectives. There is serious need for a national water policy that will provide effectively for the needs of each of these interests."

Dr. Sayre also pointed out that atomic energy development will require vast water supplies.

Latins Are Cautioned On Unstable Regimes

Latin American republics can hardly hope to attract private American investments without stable democratic governments, Assistant Secretary of State Edward G. Miller, jr., said yesterday.

Miller said the great economic development of the United States could not have taken place "if investors had lacked confidence in the stability and continuity of the national government, if they had lived in fear from week to week of abrupt changes in the presidency, with all the attendant uncertainties."

"It could not have taken place," he said, "if the security of their persons and their businesses had been subject to the whims of a dictator with arrogated powers to tax and destroy."

This implied rebuke and warning to certain Latin American dictatorships was contained in a speech prepared for delivery to the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations.

Miller, who has charge of Latin American affairs at the State Department, said the American republics needed private capital to supplement government loans, and that the rate of private investment is "much slower than it need be or should be."

One way to attract foreign investment, he said, was to give managerial staffs confidence in "the inviolability of the home, the right to pursue one's own religious beliefs, the right to a prompt and fair trial in case of accusation of crimes."

Another way, he said, was to have "stable, democratic government," and a third was to have plenty of local investment alongside foreign capital.

"The inadequacy of local capital is, in fact, one of the substantial deterrents to new investment in Latin America," he declared.

Miller also cited four other requirements for attracting American private capital:

1. The absence of discrimination against foreign investment;
2. The assurance that American earnings can be converted into dollars;
3. "A fair and rational system of taxation," and
4. "The technical competence and know-how to make the capital productive."

'For Propaganda'

Berlin Train 'Sabotage' Laid to Reds

Berlin, Feb. 1 (U.P.).—An anti-Communist labor leader today accused the Russian-controlled German railway management of sabotaging its own trains for propaganda purposes.

Heinz Bracht, chairman of the West Berlin Railway Union, sharply denied East-German charges that western workers, aided by police, were tampering with rail lines in the western sectors of the city.

"We believe the railway administration uses its own people to execute destructive acts, in order to make political profit by denouncing others," Bracht said.

Communist propagandists had hinted yesterday and today that the "sabotage" might be used as a pretext for limiting rail traffic to augment Russia's "baby blockade" of the highway linking Berlin and the west.

The highway slowdown still was in force today, as Soviet sentries continued to "inspect the documents" of trucks seeking to travel from western Germany to Berlin. At noon, 170 trucks were lined up at the Helmstedt highway checkpoint, awaiting clearance for Berlin, but by nightfall the "backlog" had been reduced to 60 vehicles.

Europe Short In Self-Help, Hoffman Says

Paris, Feb. 1 (A.P.).—Paul G. Hoffman said tonight European nations have made excellent progress in carrying through measures of self-help, but still have not done enough.

"None of the steps taken toward liberalization of trade has been adequate," the boss of the Economic Cooperation Administration told a news conference.

He said the practice of dual pricing—in which domestic consumers pay less for goods than foreign customers—must be eliminated.

Hoffman attended a Paris session of ministers from the 18 European areas that get Marshall Plan money from the United States. They direct the organization for European Economic Cooperation.

Returning to Capital

Hoffman is returning to Washington by plane tonight to start drafting a brief to Congress on Marshall Plan needs for next year.

He gave out a prepared statement saying "there is genuine and continued expectation (by the United States) that the nations of the OEEC" will carry out their pledges of total, mutual help.

In reply to questions, Hoffman said the United States has taken a number of steps to lower its own import duties to encourage European selling in America.

"The United States," he said, "is now realizing that trade is a two-way street. If ever we are to have sound business relations with Europe, we must allow Europe to sell to us."

He said he was convinced the American people will back the European recovery with additional Marshall Plan billions, "because they believe it is the chance to insure peace and prosperity."

Ends in '52, He Says

Asked whether that meant more billions after the Marshall Plan ends in 1952, Hoffman emphatically declared:

"No, the ECA goes out of business June 30, 1952."

He praised the appointment by the OEEC yesterday of Dirk U. Stikker, Dutch Foreign Minister, as a political conciliator for the Marshall Plan areas.

Stikker's appointment was the only concrete action taken by the ministers. They spent several hours in secret sessions discussing the liberalization of trade, but agreed only to remove 10 percent more of their import quotas, "subject to the implementation of a satisfactory payments scheme."

Martinsburg Seeks Rent Controls Again

By The Associated Press

Immediate restoration of rent controls in the Martinsburg, W. Va., area was sought today by the Textile Workers Union of America.

A union spokesman said the plea was being made on behalf of a group of citizens, mainly employed textile workers.

In a letter to Housing Expediter Tighe E. Woods, William DuChessi, assistant TWVA regional director, said there have been numerous complaints of excessive rent increases since controls were lifted.

West Germans Adopt Old Eagle Insignia

Bonn, Germany, Feb. 1 (A.P.).—The West German Republic today adopted the eagle of the pre-Hitler Weimar Republic as its official insignia.

The government announcement said that by this act it wished to emphasize "that the Federal (West) German Republic is no new state but is identical with the German realm which was suspended in 1945."

Insanity Claim Challenged

Bridgeport, Conn., Feb. 1 (A.P.).—The State challenged Carol Ann Paight's insanity plea today with the assertion that she knew she was acting unlawfully when she killed her cancer-sick father.

In the midst of Carol Ann's mercy-slaying trial, State's Attorney Lorin W. Willis ascribed to the blonde, 21-year-old girl the statement:

'I know what I have done. I know what I have done is against the law."

Superior Court Judge John A. Cornell allowed the statement to stand over the protests of Chief Defense Lawyer David Goldstein, defending Carol Ann on a second degree murder charge for the September 23 shooting of Police Sergt. Carl Paight, 52. But first, Willis had to assure the court he would produce testimony later to back up the statement.

Dr. Victor J. Mulaire was on the stand when Willis injected the statement into the trial.

The physician, called by the defense to back its insanity plea, had told the jury Carol Ann was the "picture of insanity."

That, said Dr. Mulaire, was after he and another physician had told Carol Ann and her mother Sergeant Paight was doomed to die of cancer.

Willis, told Dr. Mulaire the State intended to produce a rebuttal witness later who heard she fired a bullet into her father's head. Carol Ann acknowledge she knew she was breaking the law when she

10 More Tell of Oath Taken by Christoffel

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Ten members and former members of the House Labor Committee testified yesterday that they were present March 1, 1947, when Harold Christoffel swore he was not a Communist.

Their testimony brought to 12 the number of those on the 25-man committee who have declared they were present at the hearing. Two more are expected to testify today.

Christoffel, former president of Local 248, UAW-CIO, at the Allis-Chalmers Milwaukee plant, is on trial in District Court on a charge that he perjured himself when he denied Communist affiliations.

A prior conviction on the same charge was reversed by the Supreme Court on the ground that the Government had not proved a quorum of the Labor Committee was present when Christoffel made his denial.

Thirteen members of the committee constitute a quorum. In addition to the 11 members and former members who have sworn at the present trial that they were present, the late Representative Thomas L. Owens (R., Ill.) testified at the first trial that he sat throughout the session that heard Christoffel.

Witnesses yesterday were Representatives Ralph W. Gwinn (R., N. Y.), Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.), Wint Smith (R., Kans.), Carroll D. Kearns (R., Pa.), John Lesinski (D., Mich.), Walter E. Brehm (R., Ohio), O. C. Fisher (D., Tex.), and John F. Kennedy (D., Mass.), and former Representatives Max Schwab (R., Mo.), and Charles J. Kersten (R., Wis.).

All testified on direct examinations by John S. Pratt, chief prosecutor, that they had been present when Christoffel was sworn and when he answered "no" to a series of questions by Representative Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.) about membership in the Communist Party and association with Communists. They stuck to their testimony under cross-examination by Defense Counsel O. John Rogge.

Hoffman and former Representative Edward O. McCowen (R., Ohio) were scheduled to testify today. Former Labor Committee Chairman Fred A. Hartley (R., N. J.) testified Tuesday that he was present when Christoffel was questioned.

Priest Supports Bridges at Trial

Giving Away Cigarettes Grew 'Like Snowball'

Plymouth, Eng., Feb. 1 (AP).—Phyllis Stone, 20, clerk in a tobacco store, was fined £50 ($140) on a theft charge today because she gave away 232,220 of the store's cigarettes to her friends.

"It was like a snowball," she told the judge. "I got started giving out a few and it got beyond my control."

Turbulence Again Marks Bridges Trial

San Francisco, Feb. 1 (AP).—The Harry Bridges perjury trial went through another turbulent session today as:

One defense attorney shouted at Federal Judge George Harris: "Your honor, you ought to be ashamed of yourself!"

The lawyer's colleague charged the court: "You should assign this as misconduct against yourself!"

The tumult arose after a Roman Catholic priest testified that Bridges is "not only a truthful, honest and upright man, but more."

A defense move for a mistrial was rejected.

Bridges, head of the CIO Longshore Union, is on trial on a charge that he swore falsely at his 1945 citizenship hearing that he was not and never had been a Communist.

Today's blowup came while the Rev. Paul W. Meinecke, pastor of St. Brendan's Church at Eureka, Nav., was on the stand. He knew Bridges while pastor for 10 years of St. Boniface Catholic Church in San Francisco, where the priest helped organize the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists, he said.

He testified he had discussed with the longshore leader the salvation of Bridges' soul, but admitted "my talks were not as successful as I wished they might have been." He said Bridges was born and baptized a Catholic in Australia.

The witness volunteered that he had talked with James MacInnes, one of the defense attorneys. He explained he had wanted to refresh his own memory, especially on dates. Then he remarked, "In Nevada we have no clocks and no calendars, and we don't know one day from another."

Judge Harris appeared puzzled. He wrinkled his brow. "Have you recently been subjected to medical treatment?" He asked the priest.

Defense Attorney Vincent Hallinan bounded to his feet with a howl MacInnis came up shouting: "You ought to assign this as misconduct against yourself," Hallinan yelled at Judge Harris.

"I've never heard of such a thing," MacInnis panted. "Your honor, you ought to be ashamed of yourself."

Judge Harris: "The question was asked in perfect propriety—" After several more interruptions by the defense lawyers, Judge Harris told the jury:

"My respect for a man of the cloth will not be reflected upon by anything I have asked this witness. Any witness who comes into a court of law is subjected to cross examination."

Radio Signal Kindles Faint Hope for C-54

Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, Feb. 1 (AP).—A fleet of planes pursued a weak radio signal across the Yukon wilderness today in the search for a missing United States Air Force C-54 and 44 men who vanished with it.

They failed to find any definite clew.

It was the sixth day of the most extensive air search ever carried on in the North. Visibility was good but thick weather is expected to impede the search Thursday.

A faint, two-minute signal on a distress call frequency kindled new hope during the night that there might be survivors of the missing plane.

The signal was picked up by a radioman aboard another C-54 which made a night flight southward from Whitehorse to Fort Nelson, British of Columbia. The Air Force crew flew back over the same course today without hearing the signal again.

A ground station in the area reported it also had picked up a signal on the distress frequency. The station did not say when it had heard the signals.

Miss Coplon's Lawyer Raises Perjury Issue

New York, Feb. 1 (AP).—Judith Coplon's lawyer raised the issue of perjury today in the trial of the former Government girl and her alleged Russian accomplice on spy conspiracy charges.

Archibald Palmer, the attorney, made his remarks during testimony by FBI Agent T. Scott Miller, jr., who said he did not know Miss Coplon's telephone wires were tapped.

"You are an attorney and you know what perjury is?" Palmer demanded.

"Oh, stop that," Federal Judge Sylvester J. Ryan directed, and Palmer did not pursue the matter.

Miller insisted he had no knowledge of the wire-tapping although he admitted destroying "summaries of what I had reason to believe were telephone interceptions."

The defense says the Government's case against Miss Coplon and Valentin A. Gubitchev is based on illegal wire-tapping.

The defendants are being tried on charges of conspiring to steal United States secrets for the Russians.

Today's other FBI witness, Roger W. Robinson, added a few details to Miller's account of the February 18, 1949, meeting of Miss Coplon and Gubitchev on a New York street.

Breath Test Developed for Lung Ailments

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

A breath coloring test for the detection of lung disorders has been developed at the University of Pennsylvania, it was announced last night.

The costly device, which emits neon light hues in colors varying with the patient's lung functioning ability, does not give complete information on lung diseases; it merely detects abnormalities, its developers said.

Future possibilities, they said, include its adaptation to mass-screening tests of employes in dust-hazard industries, such as coal mining, to detect emphysema, silicosis or other lung disorders at their earliest stages.

The new device, its operation and application were described last night before the College of Physicians of Philadelphia by Dr. Julius H. Comroe, jr., of the university faculty.

An electrical gas analyzer, he explained, uses a vacuum pump which continuously sucks a small sample of gas exhaled from the lungs into a glass tube to which high voltage is applied. This causes the gas to glow with a characteristic color depending on the gas present.

A bright orange-pink illumination denotes presence of nitrogen in the tube; green coloring is attributed to oxygen, and carbon dioxide registers its presence with a dim blue color. A special meter analyzes and records the breath content, it was explained.

All the patient is required to do is take one breath of oxygen and then blow it out through a tube.

If the oxygen mixes instantly and evenly with the lung gas, Dr. Comroe explained, the meter records this when the gas in breathed out. With uneven mixing of the oxygen within the lungs, a characteristic meter record is obtained which not only indicates existence of poor distribution but its extent as well, he said.

For the present, Dr. Comroe said, the apparatus is expensive and needs trained investigators so its use for some time may be limited to large medical centers.

Man Held For Jury on 'Slave' Charge

Raymond Brunelle, 24, of Lowell, Mass., was held for grand jury action on a white slave charge after a long hearing marked by wrangling yesterday before United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence.

He is charged with transporting to Washington for immoral purposes a 17-year-old girl from Newark, N. J., two weeks ago. The couple was arrested in a downtown hotel where they were registered as man and wife.

The girl admitted to police she had engaged in prostitution here and had turned over part of her earnings to Brunelle.

Lieut. Roy Blick, head of the police vice squad, testified before Commissioner Lawrence regarding circumstances of the arrest and the girl's admissions.

Because Brunelle had no lawyer, Lawrence permitted him to question Lieut. Blick. Brunelle insisted he brought the girl here to marry her. He insisted he did not know she was a prostitute.

Commissioner Lawrence ended the wrangle by telling Brunelle the fact that the couple registered as man and wife and were in bed together when arrested was sufficient evidence to hold him on the Mann Act charge. He continued a $2500 bond requirement for Brunelle, and $1000 on the girl as a material witness.

Police said Brunelle is also charged with grand larceny of a camera.

P-TA Congress Told How to Get News in Papers

P-TA publicity chairmen were offered this advice, by two local newsmen, at the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers yesterday:

Turn in your stories to newspapers in typewritten form, preferably triple-spaced; make the copy an original—not a flimsy carbon; check names for spelling and correct titles; be sure the story is timely, accurate and brief; use release dates rarely, leaving time of publication to the discretion of the editors.

Then if your story doesn't appear the next day, realize it was part of a world-wide news flow funneling into the newspaper office and perhaps wasn't so important as the go-ahead on the hydrogen bomb.

If you should call the editor and he is brusque with you, don't feel badly—he's probably that way to his wife, too, when a "big story" is breaking.

The expounders of the above advice were Kenneth W. Harter, news editor of The Washington Post, and Norman Kahl, night city editor of the Washington Evening Star.

The session they addressed—was part of an all-day publicity clinic for P-TA publicity officers and others active in parent-teacher work, held at the Raymond School, 10th st. and Spring rd. nw. Other phases touched on public relations, radio and television and exhibits and records. About 120 attended.

Rape Defendant Says He 'Blacked Out'

Ernest Tatum, 27-year-old laborer, testified yesterday that he could remember nothing that occurred the evening of July 29, when he is accused of raping a 9-year-old girl.

Tatum said that he had been to a party that afternoon and thought his drinks had been drugged because his mind was "blank" from then until he "discovered" himself in District Jail several days later.

Tatum is on trial before a jury in District Court, with Judge Alexander Holtzoff presiding. Prosecuting is Assistant United States Attorney Cecil Heflin with Attorney George E. C. Hayes defending Tatum.

Also testifying yesterday was the 60-pound victim, who pointed out the 6-foot 1-inch Tatum as the man who assaulted her.

She said she feared if she screamed he would beat her and that she was afraid to call to passersby as he walked with her because she "did not know them."

Short-Dram Ban Upheld

Chicago, Feb. 1 (U.P.)—Elbow-benders in Illinois who order a "shot" must receive at least one ounce of liquor. Superior Court Judge John F. Bolton ruled yesterday that the State law setting a one-ounce mininmum on sales of whisky, rum or gin by the drink is valid.

increase of $4,898,878 over the 1950 fiscal year.

Special funds — $63,216,609, a rise of $932,722.

Lane told the General Assembly, meeting in joint session at the start of its first 30-day "fiscal and emergency" session, that the State needs this much money to operate efficiently.

Despite the increases, some of which are required by law for payrolls and school aid, "the sound condition of our treasury permits substantial tax reductions," Lane declared.

He said he would submit bills for tax relief along these lines:

1. Chop the real estate levy from 12.39 cents per $100 valuation to 6 cents, "the lowest rate in the history of our State." This would save taxpayers about $2,500,000 next year, he estimated.

2. Raise the income-tax allowance for dependents from $400 to $600 each, double to $2000 the personal exemption of persons 65 and over, and reduce from 5 to 2 percent the charge on investment income up to $500. He had previously calculated these measures would cut tax bills by $1,250,000.

He estimated general fund revenues at $74,403,328. These and the surplus can be applied to 1951 expenditures and still leave a balance of $310,527 in the treasury when the next fiscal year ends, June 30, 1951.

Lane brightened the future tax outlook for property owners. The real estate levy can be held at 6 percent for several years, he said. And he suggested that hereafter the tax be imposed to produce only as much "as may be necessary to pay the interest on and for the redemption of outstanding bonds."

Lane sliced a total of $5,345,942 from general fund requests. He knocked $100,000 off special fund applications.

He recommended deductions for 33 departments and increases for 69 agencies or programs. Some of the latter took cuts in their operating budgets, but claimed more for automatic pay raises and new personnel.

For mental hospitals and the Department of Mental Hygiene, still in the process of reorganization, Lane recommended $9,379,193, a net increase of $1,003,321.

He included $500,000 for the yet-to-be-named commissioner to apportion among the five institutions for new employes.

He proposed $7,558,887 for the Department of Public Welfare. He also asked a deficiency appropriation of $216,519, to be spent immediately. If the deficiency is approved, the department's net gain for the 1951 fiscal year would be $377,589.

Lane estimated disbursements from the income, racing, gasoline and other marked taxes, plus mandatory payments for schools and welfare, will total $59,836,230.

Ruin Remote, Lilienthal Says

the H-bomb, whose physical construction President Truman ordered Tuesday, Lilienthal replied: "It includes everything you're thinking."

In an informal speech that lasted only five minutes, the 51-year-old official managed to include a left-handed swat at the Congressional investigations that have plagued his three-year chairmanship and gave his personal philosophy of government service.

He twisted his fingers as AEC officials and employes at the cocktail party-reception praised him, then presented him with a watch inscribed: "To D. E. L. from U. S. AEC employes."

The employes themselves were saddened as the speakers, including AEC General Manager Carroll L. Wilson, said Lilienthal would be missed.

Lilienthal said: "I've had many difficult speaking assignments . . . including a Quaker meeting, where I was the only noise, and appearing before Congressional committees, where there were a lot of noises.

"This is the one where I have the most mixed feelings."

On Government service:

"The thing that impresses me after 19 years in Government is that Government is still a group of human beings . . . You are all engaged in service to the people. Too often we fail to realize what a singular thing that is. This is truly the last great bastion of freedom in the world."

On retirement from Government:

"I deprecate the comments that when an official leaves the Government service it is because of his sourfaced attitude toward Government. This is not so in my case."

Lillienthal, who was with the Tennessee Valley Authority from 1933 through 1946, was nominated by President Truman to the AEC in November, 1946, and confirmed in April, 1947, for a term that ended June 30, 1948. He was reappointed and confirmed for a second term to last until June 30, 1950.

He resigned last November, effective December 31, 1949. In December, however, he agreed—at the urging of President Truman — to remain AEC chairman until February 15, 1950.

He had a "no comment" reply last night to the question of whether the President's reason for the stay of resignation was the forthcoming decision on the H-bomb.

Lilienthal said he had made his plans for private life. He added that he was not ready to announce them.

"Tonight," he said, gesturing, "I have a lump in my throat."

Parkway will carry the heaviest equipment in use."

MacDonald, after the hearing, recalled the strafing of refugees on crowded roads in France after the German invasion of World War II. He pointed out that the parkway was suited to the simultaneous movement of pedestrian and vehicular traffic.

Indorsed by Sasscer

The committee, headed by Representative William M. Whittington (D., Miss.) also heard the parkway bill indorsed by Representatives Lansdale G. Sasscer (D., Md.) its author, Representative Edward T. Miller (R., Md.), and Robert M. Reindollar, chairman of the Maryland States Roads Commission.

The hearing will be continued at 9:30 a. m. today, when Brig. Gen. Gordon R Young, District engineer Commissioner, is expected to testify for the bill.

The hearing was arranged by Representative Whittington at the request of Representative George H. Fallon (D., Md.) chairman of the Roads subcommittee. Representative J Glenn Beall (R., Md.) a former chairman of the Maryland State Roads Commission, also was present for the hearing as a member of the Public Works.

Commissioner Reindollar explained that the State of Maryland, as part of a 200-million-dollar highway program, is at work on the parkway route from Baltimore to Fort Meade. He said it is costing some 14 million dollars. Part of this is Federal money. The parkway is to be finished next year. He said Baltimore is undertaking work on a connecting expressway through the city, but added "it will be a number of years before the expressway is extended all the way through Baltimore."

Maj. Ruxton Ridgely, of the Maryland State Police, testified that last year on the 29 miles of existing Washington-Baltimore blvd. occurred 11 percent of all the accidents in the State involving death or personal injury.

Decision Reserved On Coal Injunction

Says Strike Forced

Murray Raps Bell System For 'Scorn'

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

A District Court judge put off at least until Monday his decision on the Government's request for an injunction against the United Mine Workers three-day work week.

After a day of court debate between legal representatives of the National Labor Relations Board and the UMW, Judge Richmond B. Keech gave the union attorney further time to prepare and file a memorandum on the law in the case.

While the coal dispute arguments were being rehashed in court, John L. Lewis himself and the leaders of the Northern-Western operators were warming over their long-stalemated negotiations in a new session at the Statler Hotel.

After three and a half hours of talk, behind closed doors, the operators came out looking grim, and Lewis came out looking cheerful, but both had the same reaction: "No comment."

There'll be another negotiating session beginning at 10:30 this morning.

Neither Lewis nor George H. Love, president of the Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Co. and spokesman for the operators, would comment on the President's recommendation for a 70-day coal truce, to be accompanied by full production of coal, together with direct negotiations or an investigation by a presidential fact-finding board.

The President asked for a reply to his bid by 5 p. m. Saturday, and indicated in his wires to the industry and union leaders that unless he got a favorable answer, he would follow up the suggestion by invoking the Taft-Hartley Act.

The UMW is seeking a 95-cent-a-day increase, to $15; a 15-cent-a-ton increase in welfare fund royalties, to 35 cents, and retention of certain contract provisions which gives Lewis the right to call out his 400,000 soft coal miners at will. As a persuasive measure, Lewis has been working his miners but three days a week since early December. Approximately one-fourth of the miners have been staying out a full week on the traditional ground of "no contract, no work."

The operators recently filed charges against Lewis, under the Taft-Hartley Act, asserting the three-day work week is an illegal economic weapon used by Lewis to force the operators to accept an illegal contract.

Dominick Manoli, of the NLRB legal staff, who is pushing the injunction case, told Judge Keech the suit aims to keep "substantial injury" from being done to the Nation before the NLRB can rule on the unfair labor practice charges.

The NLRB lawyer introduced a pile of exhibits, and quoted the report of Dr. James Boyd, chief of the Bureau of Mines, that a national crisis is imminent because of the coal shortage.

Philip Murray, president of the CIO, last night charged the Bell System with forcing a strike by the CIO Communication Workers of America by adopting a policy of "scorn" toward the union's "deep grievances."

In a nationwide broadcast, the CIO chief—who led his own CIO Steelworkers on a one-month strike to get non-contributory pensions—declared that Bell employes are "disgracefully underpaid"; that they have "little real security"; that thousands of them face technological employment.

Beirne, meanwhile, issued a statement the older employes can look forward only to "meager pensions in their old age."

Murray said that the Bell System companies can avert the scheduled strike of 250,000 CWA employes—set to begin next Wednesday morning—by "honest, down-to-earth collective bargaining."

Murray offered to help negotiate an agreement.

Meanwhile, the government's top mediator, Cyrus S. Ching, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, arrived here yesterday and soon thereafter went into a huddle with Joseph A. Beirne, CWA president.

Beirne, meanwhile, issued a statement that CWA affiliates have been negotiating since last may for 100,000 union members, but have made no progress seeking wage increases from the Bell subsidiaries around the country.

"No phone company has offered a single penny in wage increases," Beirne said.

He charged the company with "flooding the newspapers with phony statistics" and with "trying to settle the issue of phone workers wages in the newspapers instead of across the bargaining table."

In Washington, two CWA locals, representing around 5500 operators, clerks, and plant employes, began negotiations yesterday with representatives of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., a Bell subsidiary, on wages and related questions.

The separate sessions will be resumed here this morning.

AFL Expects Farm Revolt Against GOP

Miami Beach, Fla., Feb. 1 (AP).—The Political League of the American Federation of Labor said today a growing farm revolt against Republican policies will help elect a Congress next fall to insure Taft-Hartley law repeal.

Joseph D. Keenan, the league's director, said Midwest farmers have grown increasingly fearful of GOP price support in view of falling farm prices and prospects for more farm surpluses.

Keenan predicted the defeat of Senator Taft (R., Ohio) in the fall elections. He said Taft's probable Democratic foe will be Joseph Ferguson, Ohio's State auditor.

AFL President William Green, whose home is in Ohio, told reporters Ferguson is a "great vote getter" and said labor's primary aim in 1950 is to defeat Taft.

Keenan said the AFL goal next fall is to elect 15 to 20 new Congress members who are "friendly" to labor," to make sure the Taft-Hartley labor law is repealed in 1951. He declared the AFL league plans to start activities in the South in the next few months, expecting to pick up nine House representatives seats in Dixie—two each in Virginia, North Carolina and Florida, and one each in Alabama, Louisiana and South Carolina.

Johnson's Progress

In his first report as Secretary of Defense, for the fiscal year 1949, Louis Johnson attempts to place interservice disagreements in perspective—that is to say, against the background of the many substantial accomplishments of unification. Properly speaking, of course, unification is not an end, but merely a tool for obtaining the most effective national defense. Significantly, Mr. Johnson believes that the Nation's defenses "have never been in a more favorable condition in time of peace."

In a sense the report reflects the difference in personality between Mr. Johnson and his predecessor, James Forrestal. Whereas Mr. Forrestal's report a year ago was tenuous and recognized many defects, Mr. Johnson's is confident and positive. To the extent that this change of tone indicates decisions made and acted upon, and not the mere minimizing of difficulties, it is encouraging.

There is, for example, an impression of integration and pattern in the many disparate activities Secretary Johnson describes. Not only does this hold true respecting such obvious moves as the abolition of useless committees, it holds true in the more important areas of strategic planning, procurement and mobilization planning, research, personnel policy and the highly important dovetailing of military and foreign policies.

Thus Mr. Johnson shows a well-warranted concern over the burden of defense expenditures upon the Nation. His primary aim, however, is not economy for its own sake, but to make each military function justify itself. Translated into practical terms, this means that no service can be the sole judge of its expenditures. Mr. Johnson reiterates his faith in the majority advice of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He holds that each viewpoint should be heard and weighed, but that decisions, once taken, should be carried out ungrudgingly. This is sensible doctrine which substitutes collective judgment for single service "infallibility."

The same broad philosophy pervades Secretary Johnson's recognition of the fact that America's frontier is in Europe. He stresses the vital relationship to American defense of the Atlantic Treaty and military aid program—though he does not expect immediate results, and his skepticism is well borne out by the slow start on MAP. And while he believes that the ability to retaliate rapidly is the best defense against surprise attack, he asserts that a war could not be won by a single arm. Presumably this conclusion also extends to a single weapon. That is important to remember as the AEC proceeds to go ahead with the hydrogen bomb. There never was a time when it was more imperative to think beyond immediate military and foreign policies to long-range national objectives.

Science Foundation

A National Science Foundation, first proposed in 1946 and repeatedly urged upon Congress by the President, remains still no more than a proposal—enmeshed in the obstructionism of the House Rules Committee. A National Science Foundation bill has been passed by the Senate three times. Once it also passed the House and in 1948 went to the President, who vetoed it, very properly, in our judgment, because the particular bill then adopted would have vested authority in a part-time board of private citizens instead of in a director appointed by and responsible to the President. The Senate has since accepted a more satisfactory version. But the House, hamstrung by its Rules Committee, has failed to take concurrent action.

The need for a science foundation has increased rather than diminished with the passage of time. On the level of national security alone, Government encouragement of scientific research, especially in the realm of pure, as contrasted with applied, science, is imperative to keep the country in the van of technological development. Equally important is Government encouragement to the pursuit of science as a career on the part of talented young men who need financial aid. Our reservoir of scientific brains, imprudently depleted by the manpower mobilization policies of the war years, is now at a low ebb. And, apart from considerations of military security, the fostering of science is vital to the future strength of the national economy.

The Government is now stimulating scientific work, of course, in important ways through the Army, the Navy and the Atomic Energy Commission. But in the main this is work on weapons rather than on the basic research problems on the solution of which the development of wartime and peacetime applications of science necessarily depend. The result is a distorted and imbalanced utilization of scientific resources. A National Science Foundation is essential to achieve a rounded program. The Priest bill, companion to the Smith bill which was passed by the Senate, should be yanked out of the Rules Committee's hands and submitted to the House for decision. Delay in this is a dangerous form of waste.

The Case Of Mr. Spaak

The British explain their rejection of Paul-Henri Spaak as head of the OEEC in Paris as due to Mr. Spaak and not to the idea of giving OEEC a direction. What is Mr. Spaak's offense? So far as we can make out, it is some plain talking in which he indulged while he was recently in America. The former Belgian Prime Minister spoke in Philadelphia on January 14 on the British attitude toward continental Europe. It was a repetition of a speech he had already given in London. The pith of his address was this:

> . . . there is, today, no really great power in Europe. A balance of power policy has become impossible. Great Britain can no longer be the beam of a balance the scales of which no longer exist; she must be herself, a positive and active element in Europe.
> Dare I say it, with all the admiration and friendship I feel for her: She must beware. If Great Britain turns away from continental Europe it will be a great misfortune for the latter, but, in the long run I am convinced that it will be a misfortune for Great Britain too.
> The Europe I am speaking about is a mutilated Europe. We no longer have any contact with eastern Europe, nor with the greatest part of central Europe. We cannot, therefore, deprive ourselves of all that represents the Anglo-Saxon influence. If Europe has to be made without Great Britain, I believe she will be made, nevertheless, but she would be nothing more than a caricature.
> In that Europe, Germany will play a considerable part, I do not hesitate to say, too considerable. I am ready to look at the German problem with an open mind, and to forget everything it is possible to forget, but to make in Europe the necessary counterbalance to the inevitable German influence, Great Britain's presence is more than indispensable.
> Those who hesitate in Great Britain, often mention their ties with the Commonwealth to support their attitude. Reason or pretext, I do not know.

This is merely an excerpt from a speech in which Mr. Spaak dealt with the problem of Europe. It was the excerpt which the newspaper reporters used and upon which the copyreaders built their headlines. The British are giving the impression in their umbrage that Mr. Spaak is anti-British. Only a person who has been asleep for the last 20 years would dub Mr. Spaak antipathetic to Britain. The evidence of his distinguished career—as a Socialist leader, as Belgium's Premier, as a European figure—is all to the contrary. Mr. Spaak in his visits to America has gone out of his way to speak with sympathy and understanding of Britain and of the problems of its Labor government. Many Washingtonians can testify to the readiness and persuasiveness with which he gratuitously comes to the support of Britain's Labor government in conversation.

Mr. Spaak spoke in Philadelphia as a European. This is what he is, first and foremost. He is entitled to think that his record as a statesman and his prestige as a European should both have saved him from the narrowmindedness of nationalistic touchiness. The fact is that the Belgian statesman is, after Mr. Churchill, the most eloquent and stanchest champion of a real instead of a phony organization of Europe. He was a pillar of strength before and during the convocation of the Council of Europe at Strasbourg in behalf of a united Europe. By acclamation he was made the first president of the European Consultative Assembly, the moral parliament of Europe. He still is its president.

The British, to absolve themselves from the reproach of turning their backs on Europe, have proposed in place of Mr. Spaak the Dutch Foreign Minister, Mr. Dirk U. Stikker. And Mr. Stikker has now been appointed. For the Dutch minister we entertain the highest respect. But Mr. Stikker is not Mr. Spaak. Mr. Stikker is an officeholder in his own country, and can give only part of his time to the job which is now called, of all things, "political conciliator" of OEEC. Mr. Spaak, however, no longer holds office in Belgium. He would have been able to devote all his time, as well as his talents and his passion, to the economic organization of Europe. His role was to be the director-general of OEEC, viz., its coordinating and driving force; and in this capacity he would have been empowered to talk to the governments of Europe free of any affiliation except to Europe. It is impossible to escape the conclusion that Mr. Spaak was vetoed not because he is anti-British, but because he is too strong a man and too ardent a European to trust in a job that looked as if it might acquire significance in the task of pushing integration. ECA has been put in jeopardy by British action in turning down an architect of Europa.

Potato Bugs

There is something morally wrong as well as economically haywire in the spectacle of the Department of Agriculture being forced to destroy millions of bushels of surplus potatoes. The paradox is reminiscent of the AAA days when little pigs were killed to keep prices up. Yet it is a great deal easier to point out the bugs in the potato program than to devise a sure-fire corrective.

Basically the trouble is that potatoes are being grown not for the market, but for the Government. The huge payments to individual Maine farmers illustrate this. The Government became embroiled in the potato mess during the war when the so-called Steagall amendment provided supports at 90 percent of parity. The Aiken law of 1948 lowered the support range to 60-90 percent at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, and the 1949 Anderson law continued this scale. Support for the 1949 crop, which is causing the present difficulty, was set at 60 percent of parity.

But apparently even 60 percent support means that excessive potato production is profitable. Acreage limitations are no guarantor against surpluses, because potato farmers have either planted closer rows or used more fertilizer for greater yields. The Department of Agriculture is damned if it buys up excess potatoes and damned if it doesn't. Purchase of surpluses—the course followed—has held market prices well above the support level. But if the department were to dump its present accumulation on the market, the chances are that the general price would be depressed so that the Government would have to support the whole potato crop at even greater expense. It even costs money to give potatoes away.

The fact is that demand for potatoes has been declining for years. Even at present high prices potatoes are one of the cheapest foods, and there is not much reason to believe that lower prices would have any substantial effect on consumption. This is the difficulty with either the price floor support formula or the farm income concept of the Brannan plan. Anything that keeps the present number of potato farmers in business means that there are huge crops for which there is no market. As long as there are political pressures to maintain the bonanza for potato farmers, it would be almost impossible to provide any effective marketing or income-support limitations. What the potato fiasco does indicate is the need for some radically different thinking on price supports for chronic surpluses. Perhaps the wisest thing would be to abandon price supports on potatoes altogether and direct governmental funds toward helping potato farmers produce more diversified and useful crops.

Peace Through Union

Dr. Harold C. Urey, after saying we could not help but build an H-bomb, says there is no security in it, and that security must be sought in an Atlantic Union. It is a healthy reminder. Hearings are now being held on the Hill with the view of promoting a convention of the free world to discuss union. This is the direction out of the present dilemma. Here is one of the companion pieces in the political realm to the decision to go ahead with the H-bomb. Competition in bigger and better weapons of itself would put mankind on the slippery slope that leads infallibly to destruction.

One primary defense in the age of the H-bomb is the diffused defense that a supranational community could develop. To shrink politically is to court annihilation. Yet, when the atomic powers of the free world should be working together, they are still separate. The atomic information talks with Britain and Canada are still inconclusive. What a contrast with the war—when the pooled genius of the free world produced the original bomb! Pooled genius can likewise produce the kind of union that would be the best insurance policy of peace and progress. Dr. Urey is one of a growing number of enlightened Americans who see that union has become the only safeguard.

Fact Finding

The key to President Truman's action in the coal situation is his apparent determination to have nothing to do with the Taft-Hartley Act. Well, several things may be accomplished by the fact-finding procedure he now recommends in place of the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law. In the first place, it will define the issues. In the second place, it may enlist public opinion on the side of those who accept its recommendations. Under Taft-Hartley procedure no recommendations can be made. Although the President has stipulated that "the parties or either of them would be free to accept or reject the recommendations of the board as they see fit," the plain fact is that rejection might entail a costly loss of popular support.

In the steel dispute of last year, the President's resort to a fact-finding board did not, to be sure, prevent a strike. But it narrowed the area of controversy by crystallizing the issues; and, despite the steel industry's initial rejection of the board's recommendations, the final settlement, achieved at last through collective bargaining, was in close accord with those recommendations. A basis for settlement proposed by a disinterested board representing the public may serve equally to press the coal operators and the coal miners into a voluntary collective bargaining agreement. Acceptance of the President's proposal would restore "normal production" of coal for a period of 70 days, which should avoid any danger of a breakdown of the national economy.

THE AUSTERE MAIDEN

Though a green apple, she may red-ripen
When summer comes,
Striding gold meadows and into her apron
Tossing the plums.

But if spring, if the summer, if fall do not teach her,
(Bitter or shy)
Yet, in the end, shall the winter reach her
With a sharp cry!

For love is a shelter when passion is over;
—Who would, alone,
Sleep with no fellow beneath the warm cover,
Beneath the cold stone?

Many have turned to love with thanksgiving
Before they died;
The world is too big, and death is too big
To front them with pride.

Saar Plebiscite

The recent discussions between Robert Schuman of France and Konrad Adenauer of Germany raise a question of some pertinence to all of us: How far can democracy proceed in implementing its most basic convictions without, at the same time, endangering its own well-being?

One of the more important tenets in democracy's creed is the Wilsonian concept of self-determination. In the abstract, those whose faith in the processes of representative government is really genuine cannot logically object to the holding of plebiscites as a means by which loyalties may be weighed. When, however, the Saar area of Germany is considered in the light of its ability to contribute to a resurgence of militarism, the wisdom of permitting its inhabitants an immediate choice of allegiance becomes less obvious.

Self-determination cannot, of course, be completely effective unless it rests upon a sound foundation. In the Saar, for instance, it may be doubted whether the final vestiges of nazism have yet been uprooted or that a latent sympathy does not still exist with the aims of that movement. Should a choice of sovereignties be made before the processes of reeducation have had an opportunity really to permeate the thinking of a people long accustomed to totalitarian ideas, the disastrous consequences to the cause of world peace might be irremediable.

Certainly Germany can entertain few doubts as to the probable results of a Saar plebiscite at this time. Were the situation otherwise, Chancellor Adenauer, shrewd politician that he is, would hardly have offered the proposal.

Vatican Ambassador

Mr. George B. Peluso, in his letter of January 29, quotes Secretary of State William H. Seward, writing on September 25, 1862, in approval of "diplomatic intercourse" with Rome. It would considerably clarify this question of Vatican representation if it were generally known that our diplomatic relations from 1848 to 1867 were not with the Vatican as the head of the Roman Catholic Church but with the Vatican as the government of the papal states which comprised about a third of Italy. The sole object of the appointment was to look after our commercial interests there, and specific instructions were given our representative that his duties were confined strictly to commercial matters and in no way and under no circumstances was he to have anything to do with religious matters.

There are no commercial activities in Vatican City today that require diplomatic representation or that cannot be adequately taken care of by our Ambassador to Italy whose offices are in Rome.

Junior Police Corps

The January 22 letter fro Cynthia B. Anthonsen suggest that she and probably many other readers would be interested to know of an organization for boys between 6 and 18, with an auxiliary for girls, where white and colored boys are together learning the ideals of democracy. This organization is the Junior Police and Citizens Corps, which grew out of the determination of its organizer and director, Pvt. Oliver A. Cowan of the Metropolitan Police Department, to do something about the gangs that were damaging both private and public property on his beat.

Recognizing the natural tendency of boys to "gang" together under a leader, Office Cowan set out, not to break up the gangs but to turn them toward constructive activities. In 1942, with a group of four boys whom he caught breaking street lamps, he started the Junior Police and Citizens Corps. Its membership at present runs into the thousands, among them boys and girls whom the corps has saved from delinquency. Any boy or girl who applies for admission is welcomed, there being no admission or membership fees.

The J. P. C. C. does not cost the city or the Federal Government a single cent, outside the salary paid to Officer Cowan as a private in the Metropolitan Police Force. Headquarters are located at 720 Barry pl. nw., telephone DEcatur 6419, and visitors are welcomed.

Working Mothers

It would be well for all working mothers, having children of school age, to read the January 29 article by Agnes E. Meyer.

This series should get a mother to thinking just how much she is neglecting her children. It takes love and security in the home, a healthful school, and church, to prevent a future tragedy. A. M.

Virginia Rents

Residents of northern Virginia, and especially of those parts which are actually suburbs of Washington, are almost entirely unaware of the fact that on Thursday a committee of the Virginia Legislature will open hearings on a bill to wipe out rent controls throughout the entire State.

On the basis of experience in all cities which have been decontrolled throughout the country it can be predicted with certainty that the immediate effect of decontrol in Virginia would be rent raises of from 15 to 50 percent throughout Arlington County, much of Fairfax and adjoining areas. These very sharp rent increases would only be the first effect of decontrol. The initial round of increases would be followed by additional rental boosts, as has happened in every other populous area studied by the Bureau of Labor Statistics where controls have been lifted for three months or more.

In Dallas, Tex., 67 percent of the units free to rise went up 35.4 percent, or an average hike of almost $14 a month. In Houston, Tex., after one month rents went up an average of over 40 percent.

In smaller and somewhat remote communities in Virginia where decontrol has taken place in recent weeks, the average immediate rent increases have ranged from 20 to 33 percent. In overcrowded Arlington and other nearby areas, where rents are already much higher than elsewhere in the State, real and general economic distress would occur as a result of the increase that would promptly be required on the average rented housing accommodation if controls were lifted.

"Denham To The Rescue"

The Washington Post justifiably has a reputation for vigorous and clearly reasoned editorials, but it is difficult to understand the logic in your January 20 editorial, "Denham To The Rescue," which portrays the action of the general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board in applying for an injunction against the United Mine Workers, as "a play to the gallery" and "officious intervention."

Your comments seem to indicate that Mr. Denham acted on his own initiative, but this is not the case. Indeed the Taft-Hartley Act itself precludes him from commencing any proceedings upon his own motion. Under Section 10 of that act the issuance of a complaint and the application for an injunction by the general counsel has to be preceded by the filing of a charge. In this instance formal charges that the union had violated the act by attempting to impose illegal union shop conditions, a discriminatory welfare fund upon the industry and refusing to bargain were first filed against the United Mine Workers of America by the Southern Coal Producers Association.

Supplemental charges were then filed by other responsible associations of bituminous producers representing the bulk of the tonnage in the industry. It was not until after a lengthy investigation of the voluminous supporting testimony which accompanied these charges that Mr. Denham issued his complaint and sought injunctive relief.

The point of your editorial seems to be that Mr. Denham's petition for injunctive relief, even if granted, would not insure normal production of coal for the mine workers' union might still strike to obtain concessions on issues which are bargainable under the law and that no injunctions which the general counsel could obtain would prevent this. To my knowledge, no industry representative or officer of the Government has ever contended that an injunction of the character sought could do more than to restrain the union from further violations of the act.

It is true that some of the stories carried by the press, when the news of the application for the injunction first broke, did convey this erroneous impression. Undoubtedly it was the erroneous character of these reports which prompted Senator Taft to say, in effect, that the injunction provisions of Section 10 (j) were not designed to prohibit strikes, as such, where some of the demands made by the strikers were for concessions which could lawfully be made.

If the real point of your editorial is that the most effective method of coping with the national emergency caused by Mr. Lewis' tactics would have been for the President to have instructed the Attorney General to obtain an 80-day injunction under Title II of the Act, I heartily agree. In fact, our association has asked the President to invoke this section of the statute.

There is nothing in the proceedings to which Mr. Denham is a party, however, which precludes the President from still acting. The different provisions for injunctive relief in the statute are wholly independent of one another. Those in Title II which require presidential action depend upon the existence of national emergencies, not violations of law. In order to cure unfair labor practices, resort must be had to the powers of the National Labor Relations Board and its general counsel.

Armament Race Living

By Malvina Lindsay

Era of Suspense

YOU FIND a strange reluctance among many persons to talk about the decision to make the hydrogen bomb. With so many self-appointed bomb experts who can command headlines rushing into print, it seems strange that more amateurs are not sounding off in drawing room, streetcar, drug store, beauty parlor.

There are some exceptions. Silas Hardpann, the eminent realist, declares in stentorian tones that we should make, not one bomb, but a stockpile—and finance this by ending all "do-goodism" at home and abroad. And Hilary Gloss, the noted rationalist, assures everyone that making the bomb is really a great step toward peace. Also you have a few fortunate, firm-lipped friends who clip off opinions on all subjects, bombmaking included.

But you sense that many persons are uncertain, and so deeply disturbed about the matter they find it hard to talk of it. Beyond these is a larger segment that turns from any unpleasant subject to its television, movies, cocktails, but that yet often momentarily feels the dark, enveloping shadow of the superbomb.

You think of the member of Congress who told you of visiting every county in a certain State to assess the mood of the people, and of getting a deep impression of their bewilderment because "everything is so uncertain and nobody can go ahead and plan for anything."

Well, the cold war gave that underlying mood to the country. And whenever it looks as though the orderly ways of peace are returning, something happens. Now it is the hydrogen bomb.

YOU WONDER if the persons who have a hushed and baffled air about the H-bomb don't feel an awareness of entering a new, solemn era. They may see in the manufacture of this monstrous weapon a final commitment to an armament race that may reach fantastic proportions. They are probably asking themselves. "What next after the H-bomb? What the cost in money, individual liberty? What changes are coming in our American way of living—what sacrifices, what regimentation, what thought control, what years and years of uncertain tomorrows?"

How many of these, you wonder, would have voted to make the bomb if a poll of the public had been taken, as suggested by Dr. Arthur H. Compton? Probably the majority—though many would have done so with misgivings. They probably are wishing, like yourself, they could be either complacent jingoists or all-out followers of Ghandi. But they are caught in the middle by the dictates of their logic, conscience, knowledge of the past.

You sense that the moral decision involved is troubling many persons the most, even though the catch phrase of the day in H-bomb discussion is "Now leaving aside moral considerations—" But how few Americans can pluck moral responsibility out of their make-up? How simple to be a Russian and leave one's conscience to the Politburo! Or even a Hardpann and to know that to be "realistic" is right!

Yet why should moral judgment enter here any more than with the A-bomb? Or the cannon ball? Or the bullet? It's merely that an H-bomb would kill a lot more human beings, destroy more of civilization.

WELL, after all, the decision wasn't up to any of these troubled people. It was taken care of in higher circles. Nevertheless being Americans they feel its responsibility. And once they have thought this thing through they will be trying to make their views felt. Their present passivity, even this tendency to escape a menacing shadow, will not last.

No matter what decisions have been made in Washington, you have faith that those who are searching their souls about this newest bomb, and this new turn in the armament race, will not surrender completely to Mars. The congressional Hardpanns, the Pentagon "realists," the journalistic sneerers at diplomacy and peace efforts will not get only bigger and better bombs, germs, death rays.

You have faith that even though Americans be willing to throw their wealth and energies into making greater weapons of destruction, they will also, for history's record if nothing else, throw wealth and energy into making greater efforts to end this tragic era of suspense by peaceful means. You believe enough Americans will demand this expiation, no matter what the cost or sacrifice.

School Board Standards

The controversy between Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning and certain members of the Board of Education over the appointment of Miss Eleanor McAuliffe as principle of the new Sousa Junior High School is based on qualifications, educational and otherwise. Since each teacher, attendance officer, administrative and school officer and school official must meet certain definite educational qualifications, each according to his position, why not specific educational qualifications for each member of the Board of Education? Is it enough that they be just a graduate of college, law or medicine? To meet the school needs of a community one should be well versed in modern educational trends.

Today and Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Hydrogen Bomb

Lippmann

THE PRESIDENT'S statement should put an end to a public discussion which was bound to be very foolish when it was not very dangerous, and in any event was sure to be misleading.

TO THE question which had been posed — whether to proceed to make the bomb — the only conceivable public answer was the one the President has made. He could hardly have said: "I have directed the Atomic Energy Commission to discontinue its work on those forms of atomic weapons which include the so-called hydrogen or super bombs."

The question itself was foolish. Even if the President and his advisers believed that the bomb was not feasible or useful or worth the cost and effort, they could not possibly have put themselves on record. They could not say they were not going to work on it. The result of such an answer could only have been the utmost confusion at home and abroad.

THE REAL issues, on the other hand, could not have been debated publicly without dangerous consequences. They have to do with the relative value of this weapon among other weapons. That question cannot be discussed publicly without disclosing genuine military secrets. For while there is no scientific secret about the H-bomb or the A-bomb, there are important military secrets, as, for example, how many bombs exist, at what rate they can be produced. Information of this kind is of critical importance in strategical and tactical planning. Any serious debate, in which informed men took part, could not fail to disclose information of this kind.

The President's statement, accompanied as it is by the news that no specially earmarked appropriations are to be asked now should prevent these disclosures. There will be no need for hearings and a congressional debate. That is sensible. For the American public could not have learned enough from these debates to reach a sound, democratic judgment of the issues. But experts abroad, who already know much more than the American public will ever know, would certainly have learned something, perhaps just the missing clue, and would have inferred just enough to tell them a lot more, of what they would very much like to know. Now they will have to guess about the American plans as we have to guess about theirs.

BUT, above all, the excitement about the hydrogen bomb is misleading in that it masks the gravity of the situation which results from the fact that the Soviet Union broke the atomic monopoly last year. There could be no more grievous illusion than to suppose that the hydrogen bomb will restore the balance of power on which so many of our calculations in foreign policy rested until September, 1949.

In so far as the public, the Congress, the Pentagon and the State Department, fail to reassess their fundamental assumptions and calculations, the prospect is very dark indeed. For American hydrogen bombs will now, we must assume, be followed quickly by Soviet hydrogen bombs. The monopoly we counted on so heavily up to September, 1949, is gone forever, and no amount of talk about the extra destructiveness of the hydrogen bomb is a substitute for that reexamination of our global diplomacy and strategy which is now imperative.

WHILE the monopoly existed, the defense of the non-Soviet world—particularly of western Europe, of western Germany, Japan—rested upon the deterrent power of the American atomic bomb. This formidable weapon pinned down the Russian armies. While we alone had the bomb, it was a substitute for armies, it was a shield behind which armies could slowly be recruited and trained, and the economic reconstruction could go on with reasonable security.

But when the Russians achieved the bomb, the problem of defending the adjacent countries changed radically. These countries now have to be defended not only against the Red Army but also against the Red bomb, the Red A-bomb now, the Red H-bomb in the comparatively near future.

In military terms, during our monopoly only the Russians had to worry about defending themselves against atomic weapons. Now everyone has to worry. Some day soon, if it has not already happened, Dr. Adenauer will ask Mr. McCloy what the United States proposes to do to protect the Ruhr against atomic bombs; some day soon, the Japanese government will ask General MacArthur how he proposes to defend Japan against the repetition of Hiroshima and Nagasaki on a larger scale. To answer these questions convincingly we shall first have to reexamine and review the fundamental assumptions of our present German and Japanese policies.

BUT THESE difficult questions will also be asked elsewhere. In fact they are now being asked on Capitol Hill and wherever men have realized that countries with a large seacoast have to take account of the fact that atomic bombs can be delivered from submarines. The new military situation, resulting from the breakup of the American monopoly, is almost certainly one which cannot be dealt with by military measures alone. It is impossible to deal with it, as in the recent past, by the threat of retaliation alone. For that is now a two-way street. Nor can it now be dealt with by erecting impregnable defenses: the defenses cannot be made impregnable everywhere—that is to say in the United States and in Canada, in the British Isles and in France, in Scandinavia and in western Germany and in Japan.

The situation will have to be met by diplomacy—of which armaments, atomic bombs, hydrogen bombs, are an indispensable but not the exclusive instrument. The mind of this country is not now prepared for this; it has been fearfully mislead and confused by the plausible fallacy of the military containment policy—a policy which was plausible only because of our monopoly of atomic weapons. That fallacy will now have to be corrected. If it is not done soon and consciously and by rational discussion, the correction will be forced upon us—as it has already been in China—by events.

THE NEW situation, though it is grave, is by no means irreparable and hopeless. But it could become irreparable and hopeless if public opinion remains frozen in the ideas that events have made obsolete.

H-Bomb Decision

By Marquis Childs

Scientific Liaison Lacking

IN THE aftermath of President Truman's momentous decision, it is generally said that he had no other choice than to order production of the hydrogen bomb. Certainly it is true that only a very few individuals have the knowledge and background to raise any question about the decision and how it was reached. These few individuals are bound by the strictest regulations of secrecy.

Childs

This would seem to mean that we shall know nothing more than was contained in the brief statement released at the White House. Nevertheless the question will remain in the public mind as to why and how and by whom this fateful step was finally agreed upon.

Opinions have come almost exclusively from the politicians whose knowledge of the new bomb is at best rudimentary. They were for going ahead with the effort to build it.

The scientists who know infinitely more as to what it is all about did not speak out publicly. All we have had is a persistent and unconfirmed report that a majority of the scientists serving on the Atomic Energy Commission's general advisory committee are skeptical of one phase or another of the project, and particularly as it touches every other phase of the Nation's security.

IN THE light of this report an article by President James B. Conant in the current issue of Foreign Affairs takes on considerable importance. Conant is a member of the AEC committee. It is possible that his views reflect the opinion of the majority who recently submitted their report on the H-bomb.

He never discusses the issue of the bomb itself. His article is a serious and high-minded analysis of the relation between politics and science in this scientific era.

But in this broad framework, Harvard's president, a distinguished chemist, does make plain his conviction that Government is today ill equipped—scarcely equipped at all—to take major scientific-technical decisions. He goes further to say:

". . . The existence of a conflict of technical opinion on many, many details in all manner of new developments of importance to our security requires that we take a careful look at the procedures used in arriving at decisions. The President and Congress have ultimate authority, but neither the Chief Executive nor congressional committees have the time to settle the enormous number of issues which must necessarily arise in any research, development or procurement program. The worst way to make decisions is to resolve conflict in favor of those with the loudest voices or the closest approach to political leaders . . ."

AS THOUGH to stress its importance, Conant sounded the same theme in a speech in Rochester, N. Y., the other day. In that address, widely distributed, he said:

"Have we devised as yet even the first approximation to a satisfactory procedure for evaluating technical judgments on matters connected with the national defense? Some who have been close to the postwar scene in Washington and have followed some of the research and development projects must be inclined to answer this question in the negative."

One of these is said to be Vannevar Bush, head of the Office of Scientific Research and Development during the war. In his book Modern Arms and Free Men published last fall he says almost the same thing as Conant about the lack of planning in taking major scientific decisions. He also says that "professional men of eminence . . . have no intention of being pushed around or being placed in an inferior status."

In what is apparently a move to remedy this lack, an effort is being made to fill the vacant position of chairman of the Research and Development Board in the Department of Defense. William Webster of Boston, vice president of the New England Power Association and at one time chairman of the Defense Department's military liaison committee with the Atomic Energy Commission, is being asked to consider the chairmanship. News that Webster was being sounded out was leaked from the Pentagon Building and the appointment may not go through.

To the public, loudly asserted political opinion on this fearsome decision must seem of little worth. A thorough and careful appraisal by men of knowledge and responsibility would help to dispel the fog of uncertainty and the wrappings of mystery that are dangerously deceptive.

'Superiority' Is Meaningless Term in H-Bomb Armaments

tive, strong and prosperous, would cease to exist. To be sure, our 100 bombs would do even worse to Russia, but of what avail to us?

Granted that there may be differences of temperature even in hell, above a certain point of heat it doesn't matter to the inhabitants.

So, the argument goes, there can be no banking over the long run on superiority through numbers or quality (an "inferior quality" H-bomb, whatever that would mean, would be entirely adequate to leave a large hole where once was Washington, D. C.).

There is, however, a meaningful kind of H-bomb superiority: Superiority of opportunity or ease of use. And that may well lie with the Russians.

It would seem to be easier for them to scratch off the major cities of every one of our allies in Western Europe than for us to do equivalent damage to the dispersed Russian facilities in the gigantic expanses of Eurasia.

Furthermore, considering trans-Atlantic warfare, our concentrated East Coast facilities are vastly more inviting and valuable targets than anything Russia can offer us.

So much for what would happen if the H-bombs were used in war.

Deadlock of Fear

What if, however, both sides have A-bombs and H-bombs and realize they are too terrible to use? What if each side dares not use them for fear of retaliation? Obviously, those weapons then come no longer into account. Consideration promptly reverts to other weapons, military and non-military.

Here is the focal point of the worry. This is what AEC Chairman Lilienthal was saying, in guarded language, at his press conference on Monday.

The fear, and the danger, is that having decided to press ahead with the hydrogen bomb, America will lapse back into complacency and forget that its real and more useful defense rests on other measures. In short, it risks embracing a Maginot Line delusion.

It risks putting too many of its eggs in the wrong basket, putting too much of its reliance on a weapon so powerful that, paradoxically, it's no good.

It risks framing foreign policy on the basis of a strength that the Nation really doesn't possess.

The argument outlined above is not in itself an argument against making the bomb. It is merely an argument against thinking that, having made it, we can now forget other elements that may be the real sources of strength, peace and defensive ability.

Many officials who accepted this line of argument are not opposed to making the bomb. They, as Congress and the President, felt that the decision to make the H-bomb, nevertheless, had to be in the affirmative.

They reasoned that however valid the argument, we cannot afford not to make the bomb if we suppose Russia is going to make it. And common sense, right or wrong, says Russia is going to make it.

If Russia did, and we did not, we would obviously be helpless in the face of any ultimatum the Kremlin might issue.

Nevertheless, though the decision to build the bomb is made, the problem of "What next?" still remains. Already, a growing body of public opinion is coming to the view that the H-bomb issue now forces a public discussion of unparalleled intensity to reexamine our foreign and defense policies, and perhaps chart new courses for them.

For the sake of the record, there must be set down, briefly, some important opinion of those who thought the President's decision, at this time, was unwise.

One group, represented within the AEC, wished for further examination of the problems before rushing ahead. It wanted to know more about methods of possible delivery of the bomb, if it were made, and wanted to explore whether alternate defense expenditures might not pay off better.

This group pointed out that, after all, the making of an H-bomb is a gamble—a good gamble, probably better than 50-50, but still a gamble. Maybe other uses of the money and effort would turn out, on inspection, to be better choices.

Above all, it feared that announcement of a bald decision to make the bomb would have the dangerous results of creating the Maginot Line attitude mentioned above.

Another prominent group, comprised of several members of the AEC's general advisory committee of top scientists, wanted to postpone a decision until there had been a much more intense effort at negotiating with the Russians on international atomic control.

A final group, the rest of the advisory committee, wanted no bomb at all. Their argument, whatever you think of its merits, is most interesting.

They suggested that in a non-atomic or, more particularly, a non-hydrogen-bomb war, neither the United States could "conquer" Russia, in the old sense of overrunning and devastating it, nor could Russia ever conquer the United States in that way.

The only weapon that would permit either side utterly to destroy the other is the H-bomb.

Then why, they asked, deliberately force the Russians to make the one weapon by which we might be defeated?

Their assumption was, of course, that our building the bomb would force the Russians to do the same. And their hope was that our renunciation of it would induce Russia not to make it.

A far-fetched, unrealistic hope? Not so, these men said.

For in the H-bomb, both the United States and Russia have a common enemy more menacing to each than the one country is to the other.

This was seen as providing for the two nations to agree on one thing—the outlawing of the common and overriding enemy—even though it does not provide a basis for Russia and America to be friends.

This group wanted, therefore, some dramatic and psychologically compelling proposal from the United States, so profound that it would prevent the unborn monster from seeing — and spoiling — the light of day.

government has ever been put."

He concluded:

"This may be the last opportunity the statesmen will ever have to catch up with the scientists. This may be our last chance to avoid a third world war."

Chairman Brien McMahon (D., Conn.), of the Atomic committee, said he will make a Senate speech soon in the hope of starting a great national debate on "how the atomic armaments race can be halted."

Some lawmakers said they were not as worried over the hydrogen bomb as over "what comes next?"

"If we don't eliminate war," said Rep. Melvin C. Price (D., Ill.), "weapons will become progressively more terrible until they lead to total destruction of civilization."

Chairman Tom Connally (D., Tex.), of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he approved of building the H-bomb as quickly as possible, but hopes it will convince all nations the time has come to outlaw war itself.

Outside of Congress, a dissenting voice was raised by Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for Prevention of War.

Denouncing Mr. Truman's decision, Libby said United States superiority in uranium bombs failed to scare Russia into accepting international controls. He predicted that "our proposed hydrogen bomb superiority will not force them to accept it either."

Emerson Plans Projection-type Television Set

New York, Feb. 1 (AP).—Plans for production of low cost, big screen television sets were announced to stockholders of Emerson Radio and Phonograph Corp. at their annual meeting today.

Benjamin Abrams, president, said the company is about to market a projection-type set with a picture 13½ by 18 inches for $329.50—far below the price of the direct view set giving a comparable picture.

The projection set throws its image movie-fashion on a flat screen. The direct view set makes a screen of the face of the cathode ray tube.

Abrams predicted that the great majority of sets ultimately would be of projection type. He reported great improvements had been made in recent months in the quality of pictures produced by projection.

As for color television, Abrams said the Emerson management believes it still is four to five years away as a commercial reality.

New York Cotton

New York, Feb. 1 (AP).—Cotton futures were steady today in slow trading, with final prices unchanged to 45 cents a bale higher. Traders were hesitant because of a scheduled meeting of the CCC today which raised the possibility that the Government selling price for its 1948 cotton loan stocks may be announced shortly.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Feb. 1 (AP).—The fateful month of February, which has seen grains plunging in each of the past two years, got off today with cereal prices again heading downward.

But losses were not large, and aside from a flurry of selling near the close, trading went on at a slow, routine pace all day. Final quotations were on the day's bottom in many cases. Chief feature was the absence of demand.

Wheat ended ½ to 1¼ lower, corn was ⅛ to ⅞ lower, oats were unchanged to ⅛ lower, rye was 1⅜ to 2 cents lower, soybeans were 2 cents lower to 1 cent higher and lard was 10 to 20 cents a hundred pounds lower.

Planes Help Weasels Buck Dakota Snow

Bismarck, N. Dak., Feb. 1 (AP).—State and county plows aided by planes and Army weasels today bucked heavy drifts to free central North Dakota from a snow blockade that has held many farm families virtual prisoners for as long as 10 days.

The crews were aided by temperatures above zero for the first time in days and a promise of clear skies.

Mrs. Martin Kruger, living 10 miles northwest of Jamestown, said the monotony of isolation had gripped her family for a long time.

"We have three girls going to school in Buchanan, 8 miles away," Mrs. Kruger said. "But we haven't seen them for a month. Usually, they commute, but they can't get through the drifts.

"Our four smaller children have attended a county school only four days since Christmas vacation for the same reason."

W. Va. Floods Drown 3; Snow Buries Northeast

By The Associated Press

Rain-bloated rivers swirled out of their banks in West Virginia and Kentucky Wednesday and the Ohio River threatened a new rampage.

The floods drowned three persons in West Virginia and brought a state of emergency at Paintsville, Ky.

Sleet storms dumped a crushing weight of ice on north Texas and eastern Missouri. Power lines snapped and some schools shut down.

After one of its mildest Januarys in history, the Northeast was blanketed under the winter's heaviest snowfall. Snow fell from New England westward to Ohio.

General Frank Howley battled the Russians four years as Commandant of the American Sector in Berlin. Read what he has to say in "Berlin Command," starting this Sunday in The Washington Post.

It was 5° below when the Furnace let go

...but Nickel Welding Rod filled the gap!

It looked like a long cold spell for the Fergusons when their furnace gave out. And on top of that, a whopping big bill for a new unit.

No wonder they looked glum when they called in the burner serviceman. He phoned me, and I highballed right over.

When I got there, the bitter cold had begun to seep into the house, so I worked fast.

I'm a "neighborhood" welder. That's a fairly new kind of business, but a lot of us have started up since the war. And we've found plenty to do, with so many kinds of equipment wearing out and breaking down, and new replacements often impossible to buy. I'd done two, three furnace jobs for that serviceman before, which brings me back to the Fergusons.

Now you take a cast iron furnace. When a section lets go, either you face a long tear-down-and-replacement job... or a whole new unit. But with my portable welding outfit and a few Ni-Rod welding rods, I had the repair finished in jigtime.

I'd like to suggest to you, to any home owner, get acquainted with your local welder. He can make a lot of repairs right on the job. And there's hardly anything made of cast iron he can't repair when he uses Ni-Rod, the Nickel Welding Rod.

You know Nickel as your "Unseen Friend." And what a friend it is when it helps you meet an emergency. There are countless ways Nickel is serving you right now. Sometimes it is mixed with other metals to provide special properties; sometimes used in hidden parts; so, more often than not, the Nickel is unseen, its use unsuspected.

Write for Free Booklet on Easy Welding with Ni-Rod—Shows how easy-handling AC-DC Ni-Rod makes machinable welds in cast iron or when cast iron is welded to steel. Illustrated by photographs with descriptions of actual jobs. For your free booklet, send a post card to Dept. 19z, The International Nickel Company, Inc., New York 5, N. Y.

'Heiress' Superior From Every Point

By Richard L. Coe

"THE HEIRESS," at the Palace, is a decidedly superior picture and one for your must list.

An integrity of purpose distinguishes this screen adaption Ruth and Augustus Goetz have made of the play they wrote from Henry James' novel, "Washington Square." Each circumstance stems from character and each character is surely drawn, especially in the performances of Olivia de Havilland and Ralph Richardson.

And throughout the film there is that persuasiveness of mood and tone achieved only by the finest film-making.

Catherine Sloper is the quiet, shy and unprepossessing daughter of a wealthy New York doctor of 1850. She has no serious suitors and occupies herself with such unimportant pastimes as making samplers and doing marketing logically left to the servants.

Her father's behavior toward this incipient spinster is that of a demanding god to a simple mortal. Because his deceased wife was both beautiful and vivid, he is outwardly impatient and inwardly furious that this child of his brief, idyllic union should lack the very qualities which made her mother so alive in his memory.

Between these two steps a young man of charm and assurance. He has used his small inheritance for pleasant, if unproductive, European travel and has returned to New York to build a career. Shrewdly observing Catherine's lackluster personality and her quick, awkward affection for him, he realizes how comfortable a living might be his from marrying her.

The girl is entranced at this unexpected chance for romance and marriage. Her widowed aunt, who lives with the Slopers, abets the young man's suit and the approaching marriage of Catherine's cousin underscores her own desire for a husband.

Dr. Sloper, however, shrewdly notes the young man's obvious efforts to find a comfortable income. At first his means to break up the affair are smooth—a European trip for himself and his daughter seems the solution. On their return, however, he sees this has not worked and he cruelly makes his daughter realize that she is hopelessly undesirable and wanted only for her fortune.

Life-Long Vengeance

Catherine, who has a third of her fortune in trust from her mother, now proposes to elope with the young man. She waits for him at midnight, but morning comes without a word from him.

Two years later, Dr. Sloper has died, Catherine is pursuing a quiet, spinsterly life and her suitor returns from California, still penniless. He sees his chance to win her back and she seems to accept him. "Come back at 10," she tells him. When he returns, the door is locked in his face and Catherine mounts the stairs to consider her bitter revenge for a thwarted lifetime.

Each of these events follows naturally into the others; the personalities of all have their inevitable effect on the others.

Miss de Havilland, in the year's most impressive feminine performance, does much with the part of the girl who is willing to be loved for her fortune but is not willing to stifle her pride. Her bitterness at the cruelty of the two men in her lives is logically built and her playing at all times makes the most of a fine role.

Richardson's Superb Eyes

Ralph Richardson's subtle performance of the father—watch his ever-expressive eyes—is most compelling and there is stature in the strange role at all times, the misery of the self-righteous which inflicts such injury to his daughter's soul.

As the young man, Montgomery Clift is less at ease than the others. It is a complex, subtle role (you must understand why Catherine likes him, but you must also see through him) and he is not altogether successful. His speaking, for instance, is Gotham of 100 years later, contrasting poorly with the period rectitude of the others.

Miriam Hopkins is fine as the hopeful aunt, a step into maturity for this actress whose younger women have charmed us for so long.

Director-Producer William Wyler should be congratulated for the general integrity of his design. This sense of quality has transformed book and stage terms into superior screen material.

"ALL OVER TOWN," the school folks musical revue, gets its second performance Saturday afternoon at Roosevelt High Auditorium. . . . Carolina Guard Will Learn How to Prevent Lynchings

Gaffney, S. C., Feb. 1 (U.P.)—The National Guard will teach its men how to rescue intended lynch victims at a demonstration here Monday.

Some 80 guard officers and men armed with M-1 rifles and .50 caliber machine guns will surround Cherokee County jail in an operation designed to train guardsmen to protect prisoners from lynch mobs.

Captain Paul A. Wilkerson, commanding officer, said riflemen would be placed at intervals around the jail and adjacent courthouse with a supporting machine gun on each corner of the block.

Wilkerson said the problem is part of the unit's training in the handling of domestic disturbances.

'They Met at Midnight' Proves Pleasant Enough Movie-Going

By Orval Hopkins
Post Reporter

THE MOVIE at the National this week is a routine but mostly pleasurable effort called "They Met at Midnight," a label which only proves that the British have just as much trouble with titles as our guys do.

The story is the one about two people who meet in an air raid, are rather hastily married and are then thrust apart by the war. One is presumed lost at sea, the other marries and becomes a parent and then the first, but of course, shows up to put things in a terrible tangle. Denouement.

This, as you can see, is one right out of the file. The people involved, however, make it worthwhile, these being principally Anna Neagle, Michael Wilding, A. E. Mathews, Coral Browne, Frances Mercer and Michael Laurence. As a matter of fact this picture seems to have won a blue ribbon or a gold star or something as the best British picture of the year, though I don't know what year.

Girl Castaway

Anyway, Neagle and Wilding are the two who get married, but the British throw you a change of pace ball by having Miss Anna go away to sea and leaving Wilding home. Her ship is torpedoed and she is cast away on an island with another girl and several fellows. There they sit for three years and then, not knowing when they're well off, they shove off in an effort to get rescued. Before they do, however, one of the men, who has been fighting a losing battle with one of the girls, says to her, "Say I just figured out where we are." "Where," she bites. "The Virgin Islands," he roars, and she pastes him with a dead fish.

They get rescued, all right, and its easy to imagine the complications that set in. The complication told about is really a pip, though it is taken care of in due course. This is all plausibly done and the people seem warm and aware. I found very little to complain about.

The shots of the castaways on the island seemed a little constricted, giving the impression that they spent the entire three years huddled together singing, 'I've Got Sixpence." I don't know why this should be, since some more or less official documentation I have here says somebody spent two months on the island of Tobago (said to be R. Crusoe's foothold in the western world) shooting scenes for this movie.

Herbert Wilcox produced and directed. Nice little movie.

The newsreel is begun in rousing fashion by a man with a huge voice booming, "The Mighty Mo is still stuck in the mud."

I got several chuckles out of the cartoon.

"THEY MET AT MIDNIGHT." British film released by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Screen play by Nicholas Phipps. Produced and directed by Herbert Wilcox. Photographed by Max Greene. Music by Anthony Collins. At the National.

Kansas Man Heads Candidates For D. C. Tuberculosis Director

A Kansas doctor, specialist in tuberculosis control, loomed last night as the leading candidate to become tuberculosis director of the District Health Department.

He is Dr. F. Kenneth Albrecht, of Topeka, tuberculosis control officer for Kansas for the past several years.

If appointed, he would fill the post vacated December 7 with the death of Dr. A. Barklie Coulter, who headed the tuberculosis control bureau of the District for 14 years.

Dr. Albrecht, it was learned yesterday, may meet on February 15 with Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, District health officer. Travel expenses are underwritten by the District of Columbia Tuberculosis Association.

Dr. Albrecht, 38, is author of the book, "Modern Management in Clinical Medicine"; coauthor of another book, "Practical Therapeutics," and present editor of "Current Medical Digest," monthly digest for the profession, published by Williams & Wilkins Co., of Baltimore, Md.

He received his M.D. degree in 1939 from the Washington School of Medicine, St. Louis, Mo., and enlisted in the ranks of U. S. Public Health Service early in the war. After overseas service, in Berlin, he was assigned to the U. S. Marine Hospital, in Baltimore.

Dr. Albrecht resigned from Public Health Service in 1946 to work with the Baltimore publishing firm as procurement agent for medical articles. In 1947, he accepted the State post in Kansas. He is married, and has enrolled in a postgraduate course at the University of Michigan for studies to qualify for a Master's degree in Public Health.

Premarital 'Experiments' Are Advocated

New York, Feb. 1 (U.P.).—A Yale anthropologist predicted today that within three generations society will condone premartial sex experimentation as a valuable means of choosing a satisfactory husband or wife and he urged the Protestant clergy to help hasten that "reform."

Prof. George P. Murdock said sexual relations before marriage would remove a major cause for divorce by permitting men and women to determine whether their sex life would be satisfactory.

His proposal was made at a panel discussion at the meeting of the American Social Hygiene Association. It immediately drew the fire of a Catholic priest and a former Protestant minister.

Murdock said the Protestant clergy had led the "first sexual reform of modern times" by reversing the taboo against the marriage of ministers.

Luther E. Woodward, formerly a minister and now coordinator of the community mental health activities of the New York State Department of Mental Hygiene, challenged Murdock's assertion that sexual incompatibility was the chief cause of divorce. He asserted that monogamy comes closest to ideal sexual behavior.

The Rev. William J. Gibbons, S. J., secretary of the National Catholic Rural Life Conference, said tolerance of sex relations by the unmarried would cause him to let his sex tendencies "run wild."

Father Gibbons said he, as a Catholic priest, seemed to be "on the spot because I'm not supposed to know what this is about." On the contrary he said, a priest learns through his experience in the confessional "what's in the Kinsey report."

"We priests have our sexual propensities," he said, "and we have to struggle with them. In so doing, we are able to set an example to young people."

Yule Sales Boost Taxes to $5.7 Million

Christmas shoppers boosted the District's December sales tax collections to $1,610,758—more than double the first month's take last August.

Total amount collected in the five months so far has been $5,767,912. This is more than half of the $10,400,000 expected from the tax in the 10 months of fiscal 1950 it is effective.

Tax officials don't expect another bonanza in the second half. But Sales Tax Administrator Alian F. Brooke thinks there's no question the $10,400,000 estimate will be realized.

After returns are in for January—expected to be a poor month—it may be possible to figure whether it will be exceeded, he said.

Collections have increased each month. Except for August each monthly collection has totaled more than a million dollars.

The number of returns has increased from about 9500 for August to nearly 12,000, Brooke said. A few small merchants are still not paying, but "we're getting them every day," he said.

5 Area Men Held in Theft Of 10 Autos

Five Washington area men and one from Baltimore were held here and in Baltimore yesterday, charged by the FBI with being members of an auto theft ring.

The gang, according to M. W. McFarlin, special agent in charge of the Baltimore FBI office, is involved in the theft of at least 10 cars during the past three years.

The stolen vehicles, with altered motor numbers, ficticious titles, were taken to Virginia, North Carolina and Oklahoma, McFarlin said.

The Washington area men are George Shanabrook, 22, a truck driver, of 521 8th st. sw., arrested here yesterday. He was held under $1000 bond after hearing before United States Commissioner C. S. Lawrence, and his case continued to February 15.

John Marvin Miller, 23, of Palmer Highway, Seat Pleasant, Md.

Robert Edward Barkdoll, 21, of 827 57th ave., Capitol Heights, Md.

John Carraway, 6608 Central ave., Capitol Heights, Md.

Charles Edward Sesler, 27, of Hillside, Md.

All these are held at Baltimore, in lieu of $2500 bond each, for removal to Roanoke, Va., where warrants were issued for all of those implicated. Held there similarly is Joseph Francis McCarthy of Baltimore.

McFarlin said the ring specialized in theft and transport of 1940 and 1941 model cars, which were sold to individuals or used car dealers.

Jones Stands Out as Greatest Golfer of the Age

By Will Grimsley

NEW YORK, FEB. 1 (AP).—Bobby Jones, Atlanta's "Boy Wonder" who fashioned an unparalleled Grand Slam, took his place beside other sports giants of the century today as the greatest golfer of the age.

The fluid-swinging Georgian, who won every major championship from one to five times and then retired at 28 while at his playing peak, was an overwhelming choice in the Associated Press 50-year poll.

Bobby Jones

He thus joined those others as the greatest in their specialty through the first half of the twentieth century: Jack Dempsey, boxing; Jesse Owens, track; Jim Thorpe, football, and George Mikan, basketball.

In the golf balloting, no one else was close to this fabulous amateur shotmaker of the Golden Twenties who climaxed a spectacular career in 1930 by winning four top championships in the space of four months.

Beginning with the British Amateur title May 31 at historic St. Andrews, Jones went on to capture the British Open at Hoylake, the United States Open at Interlachen and the United States Amateur at Merion Cricket Club in Ardmore, Pa.

The stocky, boyish Southerner received 293 of the 392 votes Ben Hogan, the grim little par-wrecking machine now in the midst of a comeback after a near-fatal auto accident, was a distant second with 40 points. Then followed the flamboyant Walter Hagen, multiple winner of United States and British titles in the Jones era, with 29.

BYRON NELSON, who ruled professional ranks just before and during the last war, came fourth with 17. Sammy Snead was next with 6, followed by Gene Sarazen, 4; Joyce Wethered, 2, and Harry Vardon, 1.

Joyce Wethered was the British women's star of the '20s and early '30s, hailed as the greatest of her sex. Vardon was the old English master of the turn of the century who won the British Open six times and the United States Open in 1900.

Impressive as these feats were, however, they paled beside the wide swath Bobby Jones and his deadly putting stick, "Calamity Jane," carved across the golf firmament.

Here is a listing of Bobby's major accomplishments:

United States Open champion—1923, 1926, 1929, 1930 (tied for the title in 1925 and 1928 but lost in playoffs).

British Open champion—1926, 1927, 1930.

British Amateur champion—1930.

Walker Cup competition—Won five matches, lost none.

Sullivan Award (as outstanding amateur athlete)—1930.

Yet these statistics don't begin to tell the story of Robert Tyre Jones, jr., who won his first title at the age of 8, was Southern champion at 15, a Walker Cup member at 17 and king of the National Open at 21.

HE WAS a mere third-grader when he won the junior championship at Atlanta's East Lake course in 1910 to become an immediate sensation.

At 14 he qualified for the National Amateur at Philadelphia, led qualifying through the first half of play and won two matches before losing out. In 1917 he won the first of his many Southern crowns and two years later, at 17, was runnerup to Davidson Herron in the National Amateur at Oakmont.

Jones' greatest thrill, he said, came from winning the British Amateur, which had eluded him for years, and forging the first link in his slam of 1930.

While 15,000 spectators swarmed at his heels, he defeated Roger Wethered of Britain in the finals, 7 and 6, over the treacherous St. Andrews. He completed the match in 118 strokes, two under average fours.

"I'll confess I'm happier to receive this trophy than any other I've won," he declared at presentation ceremonies. "I've worked harder and suffered more for it."

Less than four months later he was receiving another cup—the United States Amateur trophy for his 8-and-7 final victory over Eugene Homans at Merion. Thus completed the famous sweep.

Jones said he probably never would have gained the slam had it not been for a freak shot in the final round of the open tournament that year at Interlachen.

THIS WAS the so-called "lily pad" shot on the par five ninth hole near a small lake.

"I had hit a drive fairly well toward the shore," Jones recalled, "but my spoon shot—well, it wasn't exactly topped but it was hit right in the back, one of those line drives that lifted about 2 feet. It looked like a drowned ball with prospects for a 6 and maybe a 7.

"The ball hit the surface of the lake about halfway across. A lot of people insisted it hit a lily pad, bounced, hit another lily pad and bounced again, finally hopping over just short of the green. That perhaps was the luckiest shot I ever played in a championship."

Bobby got a birdie four and won the title with a 72-hole score of 287—two strokes better than MacDonald Smith.

On November 17 of the same year the golf world was stunned with the announcement that the 28-year-old champ of champions was quitting competitive play to make a series of movie shorts. The venture was supposed to have netted him $250,000.

Bobby never turned professional and he never tried a comeback except to play informally once a year in the Masters tournament at Augusta, Ga.

Jones, 47, with degrees from Georgia Tech, Harvard and Emory Universities, has been unable to play in the Masters for the last two years because of a back operation.

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

THOSE FILTHY-RICH Pittsburgh Pirates can spend their old money anyway they choose, I suppose—after all, it's theirs and it's only money—but if a chauffered paddy-wagon from a State institution were headed for Forbes Field this minute it would be unsurprising.

Those Pirate owners upped and gave $100,000 to an 18-year-old California high school boy named Paul Pettit for his signature on a three-year contract. With the horrible examples of other bonus babies strewn all over the major leagues, the Pirates toss 100 Gs at a lad with nothing more than a high school pitching background.

POVICH

Sure, the kid pitched six no-hitters for his school and sandlot teams but so did Don Johnson, the distinguished pitching flop of the Yankees who couldn't even win at Kansas City. At a time when most other clubs are taking the pledge and admitting their errors in dealing off the heavy coin to expensive bonus kids, the Pirates come up with a record price.

Not only that, but a suspicion attaches to the whole business of signing Pettit in what appears to be a neat subterfuge circumventing the major league rules against contacting a player before he graduates from high school. If the Pirates were not guilty, at least they were hauled into the act.

THE WAY it was done gives Baseball Commissioner Chandler no alternative but to approve the deal, unless he chooses to smell out the suspicious circumstances. The Pirates laid off the lad until he was through school, but when they did talk business with him it was through an agent who had Pettit's exclusive services under contract.

Chandler could restrain the ball teams from approaching Pettit before he graduated, but his authority didn't extend to individual promoters like Frederick Stephani who could tie the boy up to movie, television and radio contracts. Chandler's rules, aimed at permitting the teams to talk to graduating schoolboys as free agents were neatly defeated. According to the reports, Stephani guaranteed Pettit a sum of $85,000 for his services under their contract. That's whopping high for a school kid without professional experience on the stage, in radio or television. Chandler could suspect, and strongly, that Pettit's agent was gambling more heavily on the boy's baseball ability than his potential in show-business. It shows the way for other promoters to latch onto promising kids and peddle their baseball services without violating Chandler's code.

THE PIRATES could be pouring their $100,000 down the drain—the surprise will be if it doesn't amount to that. The special bonus rules react against both the club and the player, anyway. To discourage such frenzied bidding for the bonus kids, the majors have stipulated that any youth whose salary and bonus for the first year exceeds $6000 must be brought up to the majors in his second season in organized ball.

Young Pettit is being assigned to the Pirates' New Orleans farm in the Southern Association. Pittsburgh must bring him up in 1951, whether he is ready for the majors or not, or lose title to him via the draft. In previous cases, the upshot has been that the tender kids after being brought into the majors are too green to be entrusted with regular jobs and are confined to the bench, wasting whatever talents they boast when they should be getting seasoning in the minors.

All the clubs that have paid the big prices dream, naturally, of another Bob Feller or another Ted Williams, but thus far nothing of the kind has turned up under a bonus label. The Tigers have had more luck than any other club with their fancy payments to such as Dick Wakefield and Johnny Groth. But Wakefield flopped after a bright beginning and hit only .206 last season, and Groth failed to hit .300.

A COUPLE of years ago, the White Sox signed a Chicago schoolboy pitcher named George Zoeterman for something like $50,000. It was irregular, and Chandler declared him a free agent. The Cubs grabbed the boy up for the same price and after his first season in the minors dropped him like a hot stove lid, convinced of their mistake.

The Boston Braves got into the bonus act two years ago to sign Johnny Antonelli. They dined the boy's parents, invited them to training camp, had scouts on the family's trail for months to sign the high school phenom at a bonus of $50,000 plus. In 1948 he pitched one game for the Braves. Last year he won only four and lost seven. The Braves have declared themselves out of the bonus business.

When Curt Simmons was striking out everybody in his little schoolboy league in Pennsylvania, the Phillies tracked him down and persuaded him to take $70,000 to sign a contract. They put him in the minors for a year and then called him in. For their $70,000, the Phillies got four wins out of Simmons last season, 10 defeats. It is suspected the Pirates don't read the papers.

Central Stars May Go to Roosevelt

The balance of power in Interhigh sports, which has leaned heavily in Central's favor for 30 years, may swing toward Roosevelt in September.

It depends on whether the Board of Education votes to turn Central's buildings and athletic facilities over to Cardozo High. The board will take the vote at its next meeting in two weeks.

If the change is made, nearby Roosevelt will inherit most of Central's scattered pupils because its boundaries will be extended over Central's present area. Bell, Wilson and Western may also expect to get a few which live on the borderlines.

This should provide Roosevelt with a much needed shot in the arm. The Rough Riders, who haven't won a football championship since 1918, could get the entire first string backfield which carried Central to third place last season.

Baseball Battery Eligible

Quarterback Jim Sullivan, Halfbacks Jerry Murphy and George Cozzens and Fullback Pat McDougall of Central all have a year of eligibility left. So has second string quarterback Arnold Scribner.

Also eligible are 190-pound guard, Lynn Leathery, the league's leading placekicker, and Tackles Buddy Nuckols and Glen Hogles.

Sullivan, a southpaw, and McDougall, were Central's baseball battery too. The 190-pound McDougall was the league's home-run king and All-High catcher.

If the change is made, other problems will also arise. Football Coach Lou Chacos, Basketball and Baseball Coach John Jankowski and Track Coach Alfred (Doc) Collins will have to be assigned to other schools, too.

Curly Wants Cecil Isbell As Assistant

By Jerry Liska

Chicago, Feb. 1 (AP).—Earl L. (Curly) Lambeau, dean of professional football coaches with 31 years as major domo of the Green Bay Packers, today became head coach of the Chicago Cardinals.

Lambeau, 51, accepted a two-year contract as Cardinal field boss and vice president after resigning at Green Bay to "restore the harmony so necessary if the Packers are to keep their place in major league football."

Lambeau becomes the fourteenth Cardinal coach since the club was organized in 1921, succeeding Raymond (Buddy) Parker, who resigned last December. Lambeau's salary was undisclosed, but he'll run the Cardinal show.

At a press conference Lambeau said he was interested in signing Cecil Isbell, former coach of the Baltimore Colts, who starred as a passer for him at Green Bay.

Halas Only Peer

Lambeau's only coaching peer in pro football is Owner-Coach George Halas of the Chicago Bears, one of his bitterest rivals in a Packer-Bear feud which has crackled down through the years.

Lambeau organized the Packers in 1919, a year before Halas founded the Decatur (Ill.) Staleys, forerunners of the Bears. Both were iron men of the National Football League which this year becomes the National-American League.

Last season, the Packers won only two of 12 games and after the third game, Lambeau turned over the coaching to his three aides, Tom Stidham, Bob Snyder and Charles Brock.

Lambeau's lifetime record with the Packers includes six National League titles, seven divisional championships and one first-place tie. In all, his Packers won 236 games, lost 111 and tied 23 in league competition. Still standing is the mark of three consecutive pro titles in 1929, 1930 and 1931.

Skiers Hear Washington's Snow Went To Illinois

By Jules Loh

THERE ARE 271 sane people in this town who are perturbed over Washington's mild winter, and last night they heard an expert tell them why the Nation's Capital has been sans snow.

Members of the Washington Ski Club listened to Dr. Conrad P. Mook explain why he and the rest of the men at the Weather Bureau have let them down.

The tall, lean, and erudite meteorologist (i. e. weatherman) apologized like this:

"Polar and Arctic air masses, which ordinarily reach the Washington, D. C., area with great frequency during the winter months, have been diverted to the western portion of the country this winter.

"THE METEOROLOGISTS generaly agree that this abnormality is associated with the unusual strength of the Bermuda anticyclone or 'high.'"

Suspecting that someone might question his accuracy, the doctor brought along maps and graphs and things to prove it.

What it all amounts to, Dr. Mook explained, is that the midwest is getting our snow and we're getting Carribean sunshine.

It's just as if the entire United States slipped a few hundred miles to the southwest, but the weather stayed where it was.

YOU HAVE to admire those 271 skiers for taking their gripe right to the weather bureau. And you can't blame them for being fairly peeved at the idea of Washington snow falling in Illinois.

After all, every one of their weekly outings in 1950 has been canceled. It's like stealing Joe DiMaggio's bat, or Eddie Arcaro's horse.

Anyhow, Dr. Mook has promised to do everything in his power to remedy this terrible situation.

Hugh Devore Quits At St. Bonaventure

Olean, N. Y., Feb. 1 (AP).—St Bonaventure College tonight accepted "with regret" the resignation of Hugh Devore, head football coach for the past four years.

The Very Rev. Juvenal Lalor, O. F. M., president of the college, said the college committee on athletics agreed at a special session that Devore's "request was sufficiently grave to grant him relief from his contract, which had two more years to run."

W. & M. Beats GW, 58-50, to Take 3d Place

Williamsburg, Va., Feb. 1.—William and Mary took over third place from George Washington in the Southern Conference basketball race by whipping the Colonials, 58-50, here tonight.

The Colonials' defeat was their third in nine conference games, and came despite the great defensive play of 6-foot 4-inch center Ray Adler.

Assigned to guard W. & M.'s Chet Giermak, who sports a 22-points per game scoring average, Adler held him to a single field goal in the first half. G. W., leading during most of the first half, saw W. & M. pull up to a 23-all tie at intermission.

Early in the second half, Adler committed his fourth foul as Giermak flipped in his second goal. Adler was benched to be saved for later in the game. Meanwhile, Giermak went on a scoring spree, and the Indians pulled away to their sixth conference triumph against two defeats.

Norway Wins First Event in World Skiing

Lake Placid, N. Y., Feb. 1 (AP).—Simon Slattvik, a locomotive engineer from Norway, sailed off the 65-meter Intervales Hill three times like a bluebird today to win the combined jump, opening event of the 1950 world ski championships.

Garbed in a dark blue uniform, the Norwegian Casey Jones, who will be 33 this summer, zoomed 209, 220 and 223 feet (63½, 67 and 68 meters) in almost flawless style despite a left eye half closed by bumps suffered in a previous fall.

That gave him a 7.6 point lead over Per Sannerud, Norwegian bus driver and the 1949 Holmenkollen champion. Sannerud had jumps of 213, 213 and 212 feet for his total of 223.4.

In fact, the first five places were swept by the Norwegian ski experts, with Crosby Perry-Smith of Gunnison, Colo., taking ninth—best of the Americans.

Len Eshmont, Don Clark Join Navy Staff

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 1 (AP)—Eddie Erdelatz will bring two professional players from the San Francisco Forty-niners to help him coach Navy's football team.

The academy announced today that Erdelatz had picked Don Clark and Len Eshmont as his assistants.

All three will be starting a new experience in football when they come here about March 1 for spring practice. It will be the first coaching jobs for Clark and Eshmont

Clark played his second year at guard for the Forty-niners last season. He was a tackle before and after the war at Southern California, captaining the Trojans in the 1948 Rose Bowl game.

Eshmont went into pro football with the New York Giants in 1942 after playing for Fordham. He joined the Forty-niners in 1946 after Navy duty that included play with the Del Monte Pre-Flight eleven in California.

A third San Francisco player may come to help Erdelatz in his Navy coaching job. According to unconfirmed reports, Quarterback Frankie Albert is being urged to teach his "T" wizardry to Navy signal-callers during spring practice at least.

W&M, Virginia Will Play Football After 9-Year Lapse

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 1 (AP).—The University of Virginia and William and Mary will play each other in football next fall.

The game will be played in Charlottesville's Scott Stadium November 11.

The resumption in the series ends a 10-year span during which time no games were played between the two State-supported institutions. The Indians and Cavaliers broke off football relations after William and Mary won in 1940, 13 to 6.

Several attempts were made to get the two schools together, but all fell through.

Last December, Richeson said he'd try again this time by introducing a bill in the State Legislature to compel the schools to play each other. Officials of the two institutions frowned upon the proposed measure, and Richeson dropped the idea.

Water Lack Doesn't Hurt Boat Interest

By Ralph Murdock

WATER MAY BE short in New York but interest in boats that float on it and motors that shove 'em along definitely is not lacking if the crowds that attended the National Motor Boat Show in New York are any indication.

Murdock

Some of the highlights of the show were an all-monel outboard boat built by Seamaid Boats, Kendallville, Ind., and the new "Commando Model 100" outboard motor, a sleek, streamlined 10 h.p. job built by Martin Motors of Eau Claire, Wis.

SALT WATER fishing contests and derbies along the Atlantic Coast received what well may be a death blow to many of them when the United States Post Office Department ruled that any contest in which an entry fee is required may not be publicized through the mails in any way.

This ruling bears the interpretation that such contests cannot be advertised in any publication which passes through a U. S. Post Office nor can entry blanks or circulars be transmitted through the mails. Any such contest is in violation of the postal lottery laws, says the Post Office Department.

The offenders are subject to a fine of $1000 or may be imprisoned for not more than two years or both.

Boys Latin Takes Over First Place

A half-court set shot by Glenn Jones with 4 seconds left gave Boys Latin of Baltimore a 40-38 victory over Landon, and first place in the Interstate Athletic Conference yesterday.

The loss, on its own court, was Landon's first in four. IAC games. The Baltimoreans have a 4-0 record.

With 8 seconds remaining, Jones retrieved a rebound off the Landon backboard, and dribbled up the sideline to midcourt. There he let fly with his long looper to win the game.

Dinty Has a Personal Interest In Boys Benefit Tripleheader

By Bill Gilbert

FOR THOUSANDS of American boys and girls like Dinty Moore, they're playing three basketball games tomorrow.

The games pitting Eastern Branch against Georgetown Branch in the Washington Boys Club Basketball Conference, will be in the 80, 90 and 105-pound divisions, in the Georgetown gym at 10, 11:15 and 12:30.

Dinty will throw out the first ball at the start of the third game and will also keep score.

Why the three games and why should Dinty throw out the first ball?

Well, you see, Dinty, whose real first name is Dennis, used to hang around the Georgetown gym and baseball diamond. He was the team's crack third baseman in baseball and played a little basketball, too. As a third sacker, his line drive hits netted him a better than .300 batting average. From his post at the hot corner, he threw out many a runner with his strong, accurate arm.

Then, on August 13, 1949, it happened.

Like some 40,000 other Americans, mostly children, Dinty was stricken by polio. For five long months he was a patient at Georgetown University Hospital.

He now gets around with the help of crutches and braces, but he still takes physical therapy treatments in the hope that some day he'll be able to throw away the crutches and braces.

Drop by the Georgetown gym tomorrow and see some good basketball. There won't be any admission charge. If you want to, drop a little something in the container at the doorway. It will all be turned over to the March of Dimes.

Alexandria Court Aid Bills Asked

(By a Post Reporter)

Richmond, Va., Feb. 1.—Bills to make the city of Alexandria a separate judicial circuit and to permit it to have an additional Corporation Court judge were introduced in the General Assembly today.

At the same time, Delegate Edwin Lynch of Fairfax proposed a referendum on the question of changing the method of naming county school boards.

Senator Andrew W. Clarke of Alexandria offered bills in the Senate to set up his city as a separate judicial circuit and to take it out of the Sixteenth Circuit, leaving only Fairfax and Prince William counties.

In a move to assure Alexandria of relief from crowded dockets in both its Circuit and Corporation Courts, Clarke and Delegate Armistead L. Boothe of Alexandria introduced duplicate bills in both houses.

They would permit the Supreme Court of Appeals to assign an additional Corporation Court judge in cities of 30,000 population, where such a court exists, if the need is determined by the Supreme Court.

Clarke is already a co-patron with Senator Charles R. Fenwick, of Arlington, on a Senate bill to assign an additional Circuit Court judge to Arlington and one more to the circuit in which Fairfax is included.

The Lynch school board bill is a departure from several others now being considered by the General Assembly.

It would permit counties, upon petition of 10 per cent of the qualified voters, to hold a referendum on whether they want to change their method of selecting school boards. If a change is called for, the voters would decide whether to name school boards by (1) election of the voters, or (2) appointment of the Board of Supervisors.

County school boards are now appointed by a school trustee electoral board, which is named by the judge of the Circuit Court.

A movement to bring school boards "closer to the people" is rampant in the General Assembly. But the question appears to be how to do it. Senator Harry F. Byrd, jr., of Winchester, has proposed a bill giving the supervisors power of appointment.

Doughton to Run; Foregoes Retirement

By The Associated Press

The oldest man in Congress, 86-year-old Representative Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.), is going to run for reelection although he has a hankering to go home.

"I've felt homesick for some time. But people from all over the State tell me it is my duty to run again," he told a reporter yesterday.

"In deference to the urgent request and insistence and to the apparent overwhelming sentiment of the people of the district I have so long represented in Congress, I shall be a candidate for reelection subject to primary."

Destroyer Keel Laid

Quincy, Mass., Feb. 1 (U.P.).—The keel of a 15-million-dollar United States Navy super-destroyer, the Wilkenson, was laid today at the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s Quincy shipyard. The destroyer, one of two under construction at the yard, will be delivered in 1952. Both are 500-foot, 4400-ton ships.

Ex-GI, Pinned by Car, Clears Buddy, Kills Self

Danville, Va., Feb. 1 (AP).—A war veteran, his artificial legs pinned under his wrecked automobile on a rain-soaked roadside, made a "confession" to a newspaperman early today, then fatally shot himself. He "confessed" of lying about a fellow soldier during World War II.

The man told the reporter that he was Andrew Louis Blasko, 25, of Fentress, Route 1, near Norfolk. State Trooper James Hughes later established this identity through papers on the body, the automobile registration and other means.

"It was weird," the trooper said. "The poor fellow was lying there in the darkness, with rain pouring down, babbling out his confession with a cocked .22 revolver poised at his forehead for nearly an hour. Nearly 50 people had gathered—but we were all helpless.

"Finally Blasko said, 'well—one—two—three,' fired and fell over, to be dead in a matter of seconds," the officer related.

Before the end, Blasko held others back with threats while calling for any newsman present to come forward to get "a confession."

John Tate, photographer for the Danville Bee, scribbled notes as the man talked. Hughes, within earshot, verified Tate's account of the conversation:

"He told me that during World War II in Germany he told lies on a Sergt. Jack Lemons, whom he thought was from Norfolk but now living in Florida. Blasko added: 'I want to clear him before I kill myself.'

"Somewhat unsteadily Blasko said at different times: 'I said that Sergeant Lemons flogged some German prisoners, that he stole a jeep load of cognac, and that he ran out on our platoon when 13 of us were captured—none of that is true.'

The photographer kept up a conversation of incidental things. At one time Tate suggested that Blasko let those present get the car off his legs but the man laughed: "They're artificial anyway—don't hurt at all."

Just as it appeared that Tate was succeeding in calming the man, he counted and fired. Blasko was dead before a waiting ambulance could reach a Danville hospital some 10 miles away. The bullet penetrated the center of his forehead, Trooper Hughes said.

James B. Tillman of Schoolfield, operator of an all-night diner at the edge of Danville, told Hughes that Blasko had driven his 1949 automobile up, bought $3.19 of gas and drove away.

Tillman gave chase for some 9 miles and said that Blasko, driving between 70 and 75 miles an hour, lost control of the car on a slight curve on Highway 58.

The car overturned, Tillman said he stopped his vehicle and ran toward the car which had come to a halt in an upright position. Blasko, face downward, was outside the car, his legs pinned beneath the left front wheel.

Tillman told Hughes, "He let me know he had a gun and shouted threats. I stayed back until others arrived, then had the police called.

Blasko was an electrician trainee under the veterans training program. He worked in Norfolk at the shop of Charles H. Wallace & Co. The disabled veteran is survived by his mother, Mrs. Reedia Blasko Bruce of near Fentress, Norfolk County, and his step-father, C. L. Bruce.

Battle School Bill Passed

out Governor John S. Battle's major campaign promise, admitted the 45-million-dollar grant would fall far short of over-all needs for school construction. But any requirement for matching funds would mean increased taxes at the local level, he declared.

Delegate Edwin Lynch of Fairfax pointed out that the State Department of Education estimated needs of 290 million dollars for school construction in the next 10 years.

"How do you propose to raise the additional 245 million dollars, on the basis of your statement objecting to matching funds?" Lynch asked.

Adams said the bill was designed only to meet an immediate emergency, adding that "the majority of the people you and I represent are wholeheartedly in favor of what it proposes."

Whitehead, noted for his opposition to the Virginia Democratic "organization," deplored the outright grant phase of the bill as "awarding the slothful and penalizing the diligent."

He predicted that a precedent of not matching funds for schools would "rise like Banquo's ghost to haunt every man who starts it."

Delegate Armistead L. Boothe, of Alexandria, rose in support of Whitehead, saying he thought Battle did "the honorable, correct and proper thing" in carrying out a promise.

"But the unanswerable argument we face in voting against this amendment is that we are departing from the principle of rewarding thrifty localities and we are flying in the face of the Gray (Tax Study Commission) report, which is flying in the face of the facts."

The Tax Study Commission recommended in a report just before the General Assembly convened that localities be required to match State funds for school construction on a 50-50 basis.

McCue Expands Argument

In the Senate, McCue expanded on an argument he started last week in favor of a matching provision, for which he submitted an amendment similar to Whitehead's.

Noting that he occupies the seat vacated by Battle, McCue said that "If the time comes in Virginia when I have to follow any Governor, I want to tell the people my services are no longer needed."

After minor differences between the Senate and House versions of the Battle bill are ironed out, each house is expected to concur in the action taken by its counterpart. Then the bill goes to the Governor for his signature.

State Department of Education estimates for prospective grants to nearby Washington localities under the plan are: Arlington County, $964,831; Fairfax County, $895,788, and Alexandria, $512,280.

Civil Service Asks End Of Efficiency Ratings For 'Performance' Plan

The Civil Service Commission yesterday asked Congress to abolish the present efficiency rating system, and to replace it with flexible plans to measure the "performance" of Federal workers.

Each agency would have the authority to develop its own performance rating plan, under general civil service regulations.

"Each such plan," the bill reads, "shall provide practical methods (including periodic consultations when practicable) of developing a mutual understanding of proper standards of work performance between employes, supervisors and administrators, and of securing actual performance in relation to such standards."

An employe merely would have to be certified as having rendered satisfactory service to get an increase on longevity promotion, provided, he is otherwise eligible.

The commission recommended the repeal of all laws requiring the use of efficiency ratings as the "sole basis" for personnel actions.

Agencies are now required to use the ratings as a basis for both pay increases and decreases, demotions, and dismissals. In addition, different agencies use ratings as a basis for promotions, reinstatements, etc. Presumably, these practices could be continued under the proposed bill.

The commi sion recommended that inefficient employes be fired by giving them a list of written charges against them. "It has been our experience," the commission said, "that reliance on an unsatisfactory efficiency rating has the effect of slowing down the separation."

The boards of review would be wiped out under the commission's bill. However, this doesn't mean the employe wouldn't be able to appeal his rating. In fact, the commission says that one impartial review of any performance rating should be provided in each agency. If the board chairmen are appointed by the Civil Service Commission, there would be little difference in their operations under the proposed bill.

In any event, the commission emphasized that most Federal workers would retain their right of appeal to the Civil Service Commission. Section 14 of the Veterans Preference Act of 1944 gives veterans the right to appeal any action that adversely affects them to the Civil Service Commission. This would continue to cover any reduction in rank or pay or firing. The veteran could appeal his case regardless of his efficiency rating.

Furthermore, Section 12 of the same act allows nonveterans as well as veterans to appeal layoffs to the Civil Service Commission. This practice would be continued even though the firings were partly attributed to poor ratings.

Incidentally, the commission hinted it was still unhappy over the present layoff policies. It said "The whole problem of reduction in force is being given further study and consideration."

Generally, the commission's performance rating plan follows the suggestions made by the Hoover Commission and Senator Long (D., La.) The Senator is chairman of a subcommittee that will consider the proposal.

GAO: A decision that would give small pay raises to several hundred General Accounting Office employes here is about to be made. After a long study, Civil Service's classification division has decided to give GS-11 allocations to GAO's claims reviewers, and to move up claims examiners to grade GS-10.

RETIREMENT: The Senate yesterday passed over the Johnston bill to give employes who retired prior to April 1, 1948, free survivorship benefits. In the House, the same bill failed to get called up along with the other four pending civil service measures when Chairman Tom Murray of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee failed to get recognition. However, Murray will get the floor on the next calendar Wednesday. He will be able to call up any bills reported out of his committee at that time.

VA: House Majority Leader McCormack yesterday told the House that it would be a "grave mistake" to reorganize the Veterans Administration as proposed by the Hoover Commission. The American Legion is leading the fight against the Hoover plan.

Youth, 18, To Face Quiz Today on Clay Murder

Robbery Suspect Arrested in Movie Admits 2 Holdups In Prince Georges

An 18-year-old car theft suspect, arrested Tuesday night in a movie where he had been watching crime thrillers, will be quizzed today as a suspect in the December 6 murder of a Berwyn filling station attendant.

Police said the suspect, George B. Phelps, no fixed address, admitted pulling two holdups in Prince Georges County and to firing a shot through the window of a grocer who had angered him.

Police quoted the youth as saying he threw his pistol into the woods near Anacostia rd. and Minnesota ave. ne. Arrangements are being made to borrow an Army mine detector in an effort to uncover the weapon.

A .22-caliber pistol was used in the murder of the gas station attendant, Winston Clark Clay, jr., 18, of College Park.

Shot Twice in Chest

The victim had been shot twice through the chest in the washroom of the filling station. About $120 in receipts was taken.

Phelps waived a preliminay hearing in Municipal Court yesterday on a charge of unauthorized use of an auto.

He was held for the grand jury in $3000 bond recommended by Prosecutor J. Leon Williams.

GEORGE B. PHELPS
Held for grand jury

Scott that the youth is wanted by Prince Georges authorities for holdup and robbery. He said three additional charges of unauthorized use of autos will be presented to the grand jury. Phelps, it was said, is a National Training School parolee.

Seized in Washroom

The suspect was seized Tuesday night in the washroom of the Strand Theater, 401 9th st. nw., by Precinct Detective Arthur L. Weber and Detective John J. Wolf of the auto squad.

Playing at the time were two crime-thrillers — "The Younger Brothers" and "They Drive by Night."

Police had been seeking him since December 12 in connection with a car theft ring. Three juveniles arrested as implicated in the ring put the finger on Phelps, authorities said.

Police said that after his arrest he asked permission to smoke. It was granted. The youth dipped his hand into an inside pocket of his coat. Weber grabbed him. In the pocket, the dectives found a knife with a 5-inch blade.

They quoted Phelps as warning that he'd have used it "if I had a chance."

A detainer placed against him at the behest of Prince Georges authorities, Phelps was quizzed at police headquarters by local detectives and by Detective Wilson J. Purdy of the Prince Georges department.

Purdy said later that Phelps had admitted the October 13 holdup of a Capitol Heights resident in which $80 in cash, a watch and a pickup truck were taken. In addition the victim was stripped of all his clothing except his shoes. Two youths participated in that holdup, Purdy said.

When witnesses were unable to testify positively that a case of drugs was stolen from Gallinger Hospital, United States Commissioner Cyril S. Lawrence continued the case yesterday of James W. Kinard, 35, of 1664 Rosedale st. ne.

Kinard, who was a pharmacist at the hospital, is charged with theft of the case of dihydrostreptomycin. He sold it to Dr. Alvin B. Thornton, whose office is at 4832 Dean ave. ne., for $100, according to testimony.

Neither David W. Miller, property and supply officer of the hospital, nor Charles C. West, chief pharmacist, could identify the drug as having been property of the institution. West said that Kinard was a fine employe. Lawrence continued the case one week and continued the $1500 bond on which Kinard is at liberty.

'SRO' Before School Board Hearing Controversies

By Gene Jones—The Washington Post

VOTELESS WASHINGTONIANS SPEAK—Spectators filled all the seats and stood in the aisles yesterday in the Franklin School building room in which the Board of Education was hearing the controversial issues of turning Central High School over to Negroes and the appointment of Miss Eleanor P. McAuliffe as principal of the new Sousa Junior High School. Standing before the board members to protest the change at Central is John Connaughton, past president of the Federation of Citizens Association. Sitting at table in foreground are Albert E. Steinem and Mrs. Edward C. Magdeburger, members of the Board of Education. Behind Connaughton are Associate Superintendent of Schools Lawson J. Cantrell, First Assistant Superintendent Norman J. Nelson, and Associate Superintendent Carl Hansen. Man with hands folded is Herbert P. Leeman, president of Federation of Citizens Associations

Board Backs 'Private Eye's' License Plea

Overrides Police Objections Against Perry Bonner

Overriding the action of the Police Department, the District License Board yesterday recommended issuance of a license to Perry Bonner, veteran private detective.

The board action was by a 3-to-1 vote, Inspector Clarence H. Lutz, Police Department representative, dissenting.

Superintendent of Licenses Chatham T. Nottingham said Bonner's license may be issued today.

Chairman Robert D. Wise of the license board declared "the police produced nothing at all to justify depriving this man of his license."

The Police Department recommendation against renewal of Bonner's license stemmed from an investigation headed by Lieut. Harry C. Blackman, member of the force for 30 years.

"Mutual Hate" Told

The board action overturning this recommendation came after Bonner had taken the witness stand at a hearing yesterday to shout of Blackman: "He hates me and I hate him!"

The hearing came to a vigorous close with John Bonner, the detective's son and attorney, exclaiming: "I feel frankly the license was denied for no other reason than the personal feelings of Lieutenant Blackman."

The Police Department said a number of complaints had been received against Bonner.

Charges Long Enmity

Enmity between him and Blackman, Bonner testified yesterday, sprang from the time 29 years ago when Blackman, then a police private, hired The Eye to get divorce evidence against his wife.

For $15, Bonner said, he investigated Blackman's wife where she was living in a hut in a thicket near Glen Echo.

But Blackman wouldn't help him go out to identify the wife, said Bonner, so he pulled out of the case.

"From that day unto this," Bonner asserted, "Harry Blackman has blasted me every time he's got the chance—not to me but to someone else."

An unusual interlude was provided when Bonner asked that the hearing room door be closed because he said Mrs. Stewart, who had already testified, was standing in the corridor "putting her finger up to her nose at me."

The door was closed.

Two Youths Arrested In $118 Safe Theft

Montgomery County police yesterday disclosed the arrest of two youths Tuesday night on larceny charges arising from the theft of $118 from a safe.

The youths, Raymond Martin, 18, and Buddy Lewis, 19, of River rd., Bethesda, are accused of taking the money from the office of the Hiser Theater and Bowling Alleys, 7414 Wisconsin ave., Bethesda.

Youth to Rally Tomorrow

Evangelist Jack Wyrtzen will conduct a youth rally at Wallace Memorial United Presbyterian Church, 712 Randolph st. nw., at 7:30 p. m. Friday (3d) under the sponsorship of the Christian Businessmen's Committee of Washington.

Miss McAuliffe Is Elected To Sousa School Principalship

job was "an improper divulgence that has caused grave injustice."

The information was Dr. Corning's report to the board which showed that Miss McAuliffe was the best-qualified candidate for the post.

The other two leading candidates were John D. Koontz, assistant principal of Kramer Junior High School, and Frank A. Stutz, assistant principal of Deal Junior High.

Lee favored Koontz because of his familiarity with the southeast area in which the new Sousa School is located.

Before the board acted on the proposal, William J. Smith, chairman of the Community Citizens' Group of Southeast Washington, presented a resolution which indorsed Koontz.

Dr. Corning said that Miss McAuliffe, who is the sister of Maj. Gen. Anthony McAuliffe of Bastogne fame, will take over immediately as principal of Sousa. The school will open about the middle of February.

A native of the District, Miss McAuliffe has 25 years experience as a teacher and officer in local schools.

Central Transfer Action Postponed by Board

The future of Central High School was left up in the air yesterday.

The Board of Education which was prepared to vote its transfer to use by Negro students postponed action for two weeks in the face of vigorous opposition by white residents.

The hearing room at the Franklin Administration Building, 13th and K sts. nw., was packed. It was the largest turnout at any board hearing in recent years.

The board deferred action when numerous speakers requested additional time to present arguments against the transfer,

The board's committee on buildings and grounds voted for the transfer at a meeting Tuesday.

Under the proposal 1700 Negro students now attending Cardozo would be moved in the Central building, 13th and Clifton sts. nw., next September. The 1335 white students at Central would be scattered to other junior and senior high schools.

Dr. James A. Gannon, acting president of the board, said that the committee will hold additional hearings before the next meeting of the board February 15.

His ruling was vigorously opposed by Dr. Phillip Johnson, Negro board member, who said the same speakers had appeared "two and three times" before the board on the same question.

All but three of the 12 speakers at yesterday's hearing were white. They pleaded a shortage of time in asking for a delay. They said they had not known the committee was considering the transfer of Central until they read about the committee's action in newspapers.

Walter M. Bastian, prominent local attorney and recent recipient of a Central High School award for distinction, spoke for the Central Alumni Association.

He said 88 percent of Central students live in the area of the school and that nearly a thousand persons now attend the night school there. In addition, an average of more than 300 persons a night make use of the school's recreational facilities.

Two former presidents of the Federation of Citizens Associations and the present president, Herbert P. Leeman, opposed transfer of the school.

Former President John J. Connaughton represented the Petworth Citizens Association, the Columbia Heights Citizens Association and the North Washington Recreation Council.

Clifford H. Newell, speaking for the North Washington Council of Citizens Associations and the Arkansas Avenue Citizens Association, declared the Central Building should be turned into a public supported junior college.

Central will be needed by the 1950's to house white students now in elementary grades, Mrs. Michael Troiano, president of the Central Parent-Teachers Association, said.

Arthur Kimberly, chairman of the education committee of the Mount Pleasant Citizens Association, said the junior high students were "torn loose" from Powell Junior High School a year ago and placed in Central and now they again will be "ripped from their foundation."

Associates Fete E. B. Burling On Birthday

Sixty members and associates of the law firm of Covington, Burling, Rublee, O'Brien and Shorb gathered last night at the Metropolitan Club to fete the firm's senior member, Edward B. Burling, on his eightieth birthday.

Still hale and hearty, Burling, who helped start the firm more than 30 years ago, goes to the office in the Union Trust Building each day, associates said.

Last night, Secretary of State Dean Acheson, a former member of the firm, and George Rublee, retired member, paid tribute to Burling. Thomas G. Corcoran, former White House adviser, also spoke.

Born in Hardin County, Iowa, Burling was graduated from Harvard Law School in 1891, where he was chairman of the Harvard Law Review. He practiced law in Chicago and from August, 1917, to January 1, 1919, he was chief of the United States Shipping Board. He then helped organize the present firm which he now heads.

Married in 1902, he has two sons, Edward, jr., a member of the firm and present at last night's affair, and John L., an attorney in the Justice Department. His home is at 2900 Benton pl. nw.

Freedom Fair Post May Go To Chicagoan

Paul Massmann, Exposition Veteran, Considered by Sesqui

Paul M. Massmann, a Chicagoan who has had a hand in many big expositions, appeared last night to be the leading candidate for general manager of the Freedom Fair.

His name was considered at a lengthy Sesqui executive committee meeting yesterday but no definite action was taken. Carter T. Barron, executive vice chairman, told reporters Massmann was one of a "number" of candidates. Earlier he said he had found a man for the job but refused to say definitely if Massmann was the man.

Massmann is now director of industrial exhibits at the Chicago Museum of Science and Industry. A Holy Cross graduate, from 1931 to 1934 he was director of exhibits at the Chicago Century of Progress fair. In 1935 he worked with the California International Exposition, in 1936 with the Texas Centennial. In 1939 he was consultant for exhibits at the New York World's Fair. He also was director of exhibits at the recent Chicago Railroad Fair. He would take a leave of absence if given the Washington job.

The Freedom Fair managership probably would pay around $20,000 a year for three years.

The Sesqui committee felt, Barron said, that the proposal by the American Institute of Architects for a design competition for new buildings for the Fair was "impractical" in some aspects. But again no decision was reached yesterday.

The AIA proposal would cost the commission about $25,000 for prize money and the expense of running the competition, it is understood. This, like the final selection of the Fair boss, will be decided on at a full commission meeting within the next week or two.

U. S. Worker Critically Hurt By Auto Here

A 53-year-old Labor Department statistician was critically injured late yesterday afternoon when struck by a car driven, police said, by a former Assistant United States Attorney for the District.

The victim is Dr. William H. Metzler, 53, of the Emery Hotel, 1812 G st. nw. He was taken to Emergency Hospital, where officials said he had compound fractures of the right and left leg and a possible fracture of the skull.

Police identified the driver as Paul B. Cromelin, 60, of 3806 Gramercy st., member of the law firm of Cromelin, Townsend and Kirkland. He was released in the custody of Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West.

Metzler's wife, Julia, who lives in Berkeley, Calif., has been notified, according to Park Police Sergt. Alfred A. Capasso, and will fly here.

Army Man to Speak

Maj. George William Edgerly, U.S.A. (Ret.) will be the principal speaker and guest of honor at the weekly luncheon of the Almas Shrine Temple, 1315 K st. nw., Friday at 12:30 p. m. His topic will be "Is Panama Our Achilles' Heel?"

On Tie Vote

ABC Permit Refused to Dixie Club

Self-disqualification of one member of the three-man Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday blocked renewal of a license to a nonsegregated supper club.

The establishment was the Dixie Supper Club, subject of a lengthy protest hearing last week. The vote was 1 to 1 with the chairman disqualifying himself.

Board Chairman Alan W. Payne said the tie vote automatically meant rejection of the application since a majority vote was required.

Raymond Godbersen, attorney for Bob White, Inc., which operates the club under a five-year lease with Cavalier Apartments, Inc., 2528 14th st. nw., later said an appeal had been made to the Commissioners.

He said that he would ask the District Court to issue a writ of mandamus if the Commissioners refuse to hear the appeal. He pointed out that the segregation laws of 1872 made it a duty to serve both whites and Negroes. The question of whether the law still applies is now under study by the Corporation Counsel's office.

Payne disqualified himself, he said, because he had lived in the apartment building and has a relative living there now. The board's findings simply say the other members, Mrs. Agnes K. Mason and James O'D. Moran, failed to agree.

Payne said the District's ABC law makes no mention of segregation, but does require the board to consider neighborhood sentiment when acting on licenses.

Godbersen declared the racial question was the only substantial one at issue.

The Bob White establishment has operated at the location since May, 1948, Godbersen said. Until a month ago, when it opened on a nondiscriminatory basis, it had operated for white persons only.

Forgery Charged To Operator With Printed Checks

Printed checks and a checkwriting machine were used by a man charged last night with forgery, police reported.

Joseph Matile Brockwell, 53, who gave his address as the 3800 block of Livingston st. nw., was arrested, accused of forging a $66.30 check for a watch purchased from York Jewelers, 2902 14th st. nw., last December 29.

Sergeants George Saunders and David Higgins of the check squad said Brockwell had cashed more than $2000 in bad checks since September.

They said he had payroll checks printed with the names of a local real estate firm and the Association of American Railroads, filled them in with a checkwriting machine, and presented the checks with sets of identification cards for various names.

Police said he was released from the District Reformatory at Occoquan last March, where he was serving time for larceny of clothes from the Mayflower Hotel.

School Breaking Charge Holds Three Youths

Three youths yesterday were held in $500 bond each for the grand jury on charges of breaking into the Francis Junior High School, 24th and N sts. nw., Tuesday night.

Anacostia Bridge Row Reaches Congress

House Committee Told of 'Hot Potato'; Power Move by NCPPC Attacked

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

A House hearing on a bill to extend authority of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission into nearby counties yesterday erupted into a lively three-way tangle in which:

1. Congress was served notice it would probably have to settle the running row between NCPPC and the District Commissioners over the exact location of another Anacostia bridge.
2. Representative Howard Smith (D., Va.) charged the planning commission with improperly "blocking" the proposed Arlington Towers Hotel project next to the Nevius tract, and
3. The District Commissioners, while "heartily indorsing" the bill, fought for amendments decreasing planning commission control over the city.

Grant Defends Bill

Maj. Gen. U. S. Grant 3d, former NCPPC chairman, stoutly defended the measure, declaring extended authority was necessary to "protect and promote" coordinated development of the Washington metropolitan area.

The bill, almost identical with the one the Senate passed in September, would give NCPPC control over design and location of any Federal or District building constructed in suburban Maryland or Virginia. It would also add five members to the 10-man commission, including a representative from Maryland and one from Virginia, and transfer from the District to the Federal Government the entire cost of the planning commission (now $84,700 a year.)

The Anacostia bridge "hot potato" came up when Representative A. L. Miller (R., Neb.), a District subcommittee member, asked planning officials if there ever was any "conflict" of authority between NCPPC and the city commissioners on bridge locations.

Rejoinder Brings Laugh

"That's a legal question," said Grant. But Thomas Settle, NCPPC secretary, popped up: "Yes, there does seem to be some conflict over bridges, and you people in Congress probably will have to settle it." Everyone roared.

Tuesday the city heads wrote the planning commission taking it to task for opposing the E. Capitol st. site. NCPPC is holding out for a bridge in line with Massachusetts ave.

Representative Smith, who represents Arlington County, mentioned the Arlington Towers project to illustrate his fear that an expanded NCPPC might hinder private developments in his area.

The huge hotel venture, he said, was "about to go through" until the planning commission told the Federal Housing Authority not to approve a loan.

Grant and Settle replied that their only interest in the "injurious" project stemmed from fears it would interfere with planned roadway approaches for Lee blvd.

In response to a question from subcommittee chairman Thomas G. Abernethy (D., Miss.), Settle said the forthcoming "Comprehensive Plan for Washington" may recommend a Federal subsidy to Arlington County. Similar to the 12 million dollars annual payment to the District, such a subsidy would help offset the growing number of tax-free government installations there.

Lieut. Col. C. H. Whitesell, assistant engineer commissioner, advocated striking out the provision letting NCPPC advise on municipal buildings outside the District. He explained NCPPC now has no authority over a District building in Blue Plains, D. C. but under the bill would control any addition the city might want at the Lorton, Va. Reformatory.

Edward Brown Dies; Noted Labor Leader

Edward J. Brown, 54, former president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL), died Tuesday night at George Washington University Hospital following a kidney operation. He had entered the hospital last Thursday.

Mr. Brown

Mr. Brown, who maintained homes at 3900 Cathedral ave. nw. and in Germantown, Wis., was president of the international group from 1940 to 1946.

In 1943 he was appointed by the late President Roosevelt to the National Defense Mediation Board. It has been reported that he was one of four top labor men to whom the atomic bomb project was disclosed in December, 1944, and former Secretary of State James Byrnes in his book, "Speaking Frankly," mentioned Mr. Brown in this connection.

In the summer of 1943 he was a member of a party of labor leaders to make a good will tour of South America under sponsorship of the Committee on Inter-American Affairs, and in 1946 he was an AFL delegate to the British Trades Union Congress.

Since 1946 he had been an attorney in Washington and in Wisconsin and also had served as a consultant for the Fuqua Insurance firm here.

Mr. Brown was a native of Chicago. He received his law degree from the University of Chicago in 1927, and was a member of the Wisconsin and Milwaukee bars.

He joined the IBEW in 1916 while wor'cing for a telephone company in Chicago. He later served as chief electrician for Robert White & Co. in Chicago. In 1930 he joined IBEW as a special representative, and from 1937 to 1940 was a member of its executive council.

He served from 1935 to 1938 on the University of Wisconsin Board of Regents, and is said to have been the only "labor" man to have ever served on the board. He was a member of the Wisconsin Alumni Association, the Milwaukee Athletic Club and the Elks.

Surviving him is his wife, the former Miss Jean E. Duffy, and a brother, Henry Brown, of Chicago.

Osborn Wood Dies; Son Of General

San Diego, Calif., Feb. 1 (NYHT). Osborn Cutler Wood, 52, a native of Washington, D. C., and son of the late Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, former Army chief of staff and Governor of the Philippines, died here Monday.

He was found dead in a hotel room. The coroner said death presumably came from a heart ailment.

Osborne Wood's colorful career began when he was a lieutenant on his father's staff in the Phillippines in the early 1920's. By cable to New York he dabbled in the stock market with spectacular success, becoming a millionaire at the age of 28.

His lavish display of wealth led to investigations, and when the story of his speculations came out in the newspapers a scandal ensued and he was obliged to retire from the Army, while he was being accused in Congress of illegal financial transactions both in New York and the Philippines.

He toured Europe, lost most of his money at the Monte Carlo roulette tables and invested in the Florida real estate boom. He was left penniless, pursued by debtors and complaints about bad checks. In these troubles his first wife, the former Miss Katherine Thompson, of Greenville, Del., sued for divorce in 1926.

Early in 1928, after the death of his father, he went to New Mexico and got a job at $2 a day digging in an iron mine at Pecos, N. M. Within a few months he was campaigning for safety regulations for miners and later became captain and regimental adjutant of the 111th Cavalry of the New Mexico National Guard. He was educated at Groton, Mass., Preparatory School and at Harvard.

In 1934 Brig. Gen. Wood married Miss Elizabeth Hawkins, daughter of Judge and Mrs. W. A. Hawkins of La Luz, N. M.

HERE ARE THE AVERAGE EARNINGS OF TELEPHONE PEOPLE IN WASHINGTON

Fully Experienced Cable Splicers and Central Office Repairmen	$94.96 A WEEK	$4,957.00 A YEAR
(Employees in these crafts with one year's service average $49.37 a week or $2,577.00 a year; with five years' service $74.48 a week or $3,888.00 a year.)
Fully Experienced Operators	$59.23 A WEEK	$3,092.00 A YEAR
(Operators with one year's service average $44.44 a week or $2,320.00 a year; with five years' service $53.01 a week or $2,767.00 a year.)
Fully Experienced Business Office Women (Service Representatives)	$62.00 A WEEK	$3,236.00 A YEAR
(Service Representatives with one year's service average $47.39 a week or $2,464.00 a year; with five years' service $54.21 a week or $2,830.00 a year.)

Contrary to claims of National Union Leaders that "telephone workers are a poorly paid group," recent surveys prove that The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company pays good wages—wages that compare favorably with those paid by other businesses in Washington for work requiring comparable knowledge, skill and capacity.

The earnings table above shows how well telephone workers are doing today.

Telephone wages have gone up TWO ways

First, telephone employees receive regularly scheduled increases in pay, generally at 3, 6 or 12 month intervals. This year, for example, more than half our employees will get one or more raises.

Second, telephone people in Washington have received seven general wage increases since 1939,

Wage increases have been more than rate increases

The present annual cost of these seven general wage increases is $10,900,000. That's nearly five times as much as the telephone rate increases during this period.

Telephone employment means more than good wages

Good wages are not the only advantages telephone people have. Working conditions are excellent. They receive 8 paid holidays a year and from 1 to 3 weeks vacation with pay, depending on length of service. There are sickness benefits up to a year, accident and death benefits up to a year's pay, and a liberal service pension—all at no cost to the employee.

Mary Haworth's Mail

University Student, 20, Lolling on Park Grass, Noticed Three Children at Play and Fell in Love With Girl, 11; Asks How to Plan Future With Her

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a student 20 years of age, at a university in my town; and last summer when I was back in this city (where I formerly lived), I was lying on the grass in a park and took notice of three little girls at play. One in particular interested me, and as the children ran past I managed to get them in conversation; and the more I talked with Elise (who is 11) the more I liked her—and she liked me.

In questioning her I learned to my surprise that she is the sister of a girl I dated two years ago when I was in high school here—a girl who has since followed her mother's example and become a bit wild. I never really liked Tess (I'll call her) and we dated only because we were in the same school group. She is very different from Elise; and incidentally there is an older brother, my age, who is as bad as the others.

However, Elise's family takes good care of her and she is well-dressed and happy each time I see her—and I've made a point of seeing her "accidentally" coming from school or church or skating, as often as I can manage. You understand I am only a visitor in her town since two years ago, when my family moved to another city where I attend the university. Elise is very happy to see me on these rare occasions; we talk and play like a big brother and little sister and she is very sad when we part.

Their Families Know Each Other

SHE IS the prettiest thing, with long dark curls and big beautiful eyes, and a gay innocent nature; and I fear that when she is old enough she too may become wild like her mother and sister. What can you suggest that I do to prevent this? I can't come to closer terms with her family for several reasons; we just say hello if we meet in the street; and I can only see Elise by "accident," because otherwise she might tell them about me and they would suspect my feelings.

Am I a fool to be in love with a girl who isn't quite 12 years old? I know that I am not, and shall cleave to my plans for us regardless, but I write to you for an objective opinion on how to go about it. We come of similar stock, both of good families, Spanish-Canadian descent; and have the same kind of social training, religion and tastes. She thinks I am wonderful; I think she is too.

Should I keep on being her good friend until she is old enough to have dates and understand my feelings, and then go steady with her and finally marry her? Or should I be just a casual acquaintance until she reaches marriageable age and then court her seriously, as if the idea had just come to me? The reason I ask is because in every story I've ever read—classical or modern—the old faithful admirer doesn't stand a chance when the dashing stranger shows up and takes the girl by storm. And with a girl as attractive as Elise, there is bound to be competition. J. C.

Lad's Behavior Isn't Wholesome

DEAR J. C.: Since your mother and Elise's mother are old friends, and you once beaued Elise's older sister Tess, and since the two families have much in common, it doesn't sound right that you should be sneaking around to contrive "accidental" encounters with the child—thus making a guilty secret of your extravagant sentiments about her.

There is something wrong, something emotionally unhealthy, about your furtive behavior in that respect; and I think the problem before us is how to bring you out of this sickminded state. I believe you do too much escapist reading and day dreaming, as a solitary substitute for the social life you should be having with boys and girls your own age.

In all probability your fantasies are chiefly narcissistic; that is, you day dream of being securely related to some beautiful worshipful soulmate whose wildness is exclusively reserved for you; and no doubt if Tess had favored you on that score you wouldn't be miffed with her in retrospect, and speaking critically—as if you were by choice a disdainful ascetic.

He Seeks Respite From Unfaced Fears

THAT DAY in the park I daresay you were engrossed in this customary escapist pastime, which is a neurotic substitute for real social interchange; and by association of ideas you became aware of little Elise, chiefly because unconsciously you recognized her kinship to Tess and the mother, whose insouciant love of life and success in enjoying themselves you jealously resent, because it is denied you. You very much crave it and don't know how to attain it.

You have an ardent nature fettered by fearsome inhibitions, and the upshot is a sick personality—that lurks on the fringes of human activity, instead of mingling with the crowd as a duck takes to water. You are afraid of sexual sin on the one hand, and afraid of being found impotent on the other hand, hence you fancy that you prefer an innocent idyll with a child to a coadult romance with a knowledgable girl your own age. To get squared off for real, satisfactory emotional experience, you need expert psychiatric help, I think—and I advise you to unburden yourself to a good mental hygienist in your community. M. H.

New Sewing Club For Mothers With Small Children

By Jean Belaire

Sewing club groups have been planned to fill the needs of young mothers with small children of school or pre-school age and a minimum amount of free time in which to plan and make wardrobes for themselves and the children. These mothers are taught how to make clothing out of anything from father's out-worn tuxedo to flour sacks. Big sister's last year's dress becomes baby's first play suit. This class meets the need for every conceivable type of sewing for the home, from draperies to dungarees. The members of this group who wish to bring along children of pre-school age are extended the privilege of using one of the classrooms as a nursery during this morning period, with the provision that each group will independently arrange to employ one supervisor for every ten children. The school is equipped with a complete electric kitchen and is air-conditioned. Children can be taken to a park within a block of the school in fair weather. If this is your idea of heaven, you'll find it at The Belaire School of Practical Dress Design, at 821 19th St. N.W. STerling 9040.

Slim Waist A Joy While You Keep It

By Ida Jean Kain

A slim, willowy waist is a joy forever . . . or as long as you keep it. And you can keep it, with a bit of exercises. A smooth stretch, a gentle bend, and maybe a twist, can bring any waist to slim terms. And, oh, the lift that comes with it! The reward of well-toned muscles is a lithe feeling of well being.

Here's a one-two-three waist whittling program . . .

Since we found that slumping obviously makes the waist measure thicker, the exercises that pull the figure slim in the middle take off waistline duffel. Start with this safety stretch that anyone can take.

POSITION: Lying on back on floor, left knee bent and sole of foot on floor, left arm down at side. This position prevents strain. Right leg is stretched down and right arm stretched up on floor overhead.

MOVEMENT: The exercise is merely to pull slim all along the right side. Make it a smooth, strong pull. Repeat three to six times. Don't overdo . . . it doesn't help to make the midsection muscles sore. Then shift position of legs and stretch along the left side, again extending the stretch to the limit, slowly and smoothly.

Progressing from a simple stretch, add a bend. This also is an easy exercise which even softies can take . . .

POSITION: Standing, feet apart, hands clasped on top of head, elbows held in straight line.

MOVEMENT: Pulling up strongly with the abdominal muscles, bend slowly to the right. Make it smooth, and keep bending until the elbow is in line with the waist region. Back to position, pull up again with middle muscles and bend to the other side. Four times will be enough if you're rusty on exercise. Bend smack at the waist—don't let hips jut out to the side.

Before going on with the waistliners, swing alternate arms backward in wide, slow circles, getting a lift through the ribcage. This stirs up circulation generally and prevents the shoulders from becoming tense.

POSITION: Standing, arms arched overhead, feet apart.

MOVEMENT: Holding a firm uppull through the midsection, and using the waist as a pivot, slowly circle upper part of body—to the side, down and around to the opposite side, up to position, and around again. Make it a graceful, swaying motion . . . like a tree in the wind. Do not attempt a backward bend unless you're a ballerina.

DAR Dedicates New Museum, Voting Hall

By Genevieve Reynolds

DELEGATES to the April convention of the Daughters of the American Revolution will elect new officers in a modern streamlined voting hall in the new wing of the DAR Administration building.

The new voting hall, with its some 28 booths, is designed to eliminate the all-night vigils of tellers and delegates during the hectic annual elections.

At the dedication ceremonies yesterday of the new hall, Mrs. Roscoe O'Bryne, DAR president general, recalled that final results of her own election three years ago were not announced until shortly before dawn the next day.

She said delegates were forced to stand in lines for long periods to cast their votes; and the tellers, locked behind closed doors in stuffy quarters, labored for hours counting the ballots.

Miss Katharine Matthies of Seymour, Conn, third vice president general and one time election teller, contributed the $30,000 that made the new voting hall possible, and honored Mrs. O'Byrne with the donation.

Candidates for president general in April's polling will be Mrs. James Patton of Ohio and Mrs. Edwin Stanton Lammers of Texas.

Mrs. O'Byrne also presided at the dedication yesterday of the new museum on the first floor of the new section of the Administration Building.

Museum Dedicated

"Museums which preseve the relics of early American days are classrooms for better citizenship," the president general told some 300 Daughters and guests attending the dedication of the new museum, which occupies the center section of the first floor of the new $900,000 wing to the Administration building.

The new museum is 113 feet by 32 feet in size. It has both incandescent and fluorescent lighting effects and is painted in a soft "Williamsburg silver green."

Mrs. Roy James Frierson, curator general, declared that the dedication of the museum was a joyful occasion closing the final chapter of a project that took 60 years to complete.

Mrs. Frierson pointed out that when Mary S. Lockwood in 1890 made the first motion to create a National Society headquarters, she also suggested that suitable quarters to house American relics be included. She said the historical documents and relics of the society were stored in the Smithsonian Institute until 1910.

Then they were put in the south wing of the DAR headquarters and later moved to the north wing. In the center of the museum is a living room "parlor." Over the mantel is a beautiful wood paneling reflecting the design of the Adams' era. On one side of the mantel is a large Lafayette handkerchief over a Hadley desk. On the other side is one of George Washington's handkerchiefs.

The Mary Washington Chapter of the D. C. DAR presented a coral red colonial-type sofa in honor of Mrs. David L. Wells, District State regent.

At one end of the museum will hang an American flag with its 13 stars used during the Revolutionary War, plus uniforms of the Revolutionary officers.

Other Speakers

Laurence Vail Coleman, director of the American Association of Museums, brought greetings, called upon the National Society to assist the some 300 local museum societies and approximately 1000 small museums by helping them form concrete programs.

Dr. Alexander Wetmore, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, told how the DAR and the Institute had been closely connected since the time of Grover Cleveland.

Balmain Turns Back To 20's 'Dancing Mood'

By Sally Swing

Paris, Feb. 1 (U.P.).—Pierre Balmain, one of Paris' top designers, dipped into the 1920s for inspiration in his new spring collection, shown here today.

A pink chiffon scarf with dyed pink fox trim might have come out of the wardrobe of the 1920's dancer Irene Duncan. Sleeveless dresses and jagged hemlines were other highlights of his collection.

"Much of the feeling of 1950 turns to the '20s with nostalgia," Balmain said. His flowing feminine chiffon afternoon dresses and his short, short (16½ inches from the floor) evening dresses brought a touch of the prohibition days into his spring show.

One aspect of the '20s Balmain turned down, however, was the dropped waistline. His waists were firmly in place, often accentuated with brightly colored patent leather belts in pinks, yellow or cherry red.

The collection, called the "dancing mood," was constructed along straight lines. Contrast to a simple straight skirt 16 inches from the floor was added by a tie of oval flaps down one side, like a fishtail, or flaps sewn a foot apart all over the dress.

Tops of dresses were supersimple. Necks were V or rounded. Sleeves were almost nonexistent on many models. Buttons in a row on each shoulder formed a neat accent, and armholes brought out slightly from the shoulder line.

A typical '20s coat was the "thistle," made of pointed flaps which hung free and gave the silhouette a straight appearance with little jags swinging out.

Mrs. David K. E. Bruce, wife of the United States Ambassador to France, and Mrs. Barry Bingham, wife of the Marshall Plan's French mission chief, were among the 500 persons who saw the collection today in the huge downstairs salon of the hotel George V.

Sensation of the show was a brief plastic bathing suit of shiny leaves, molded on the body and "seamed by high frequency electricity." Balmain claimed it was "absolutely safe in the sun or water."

Balmain's skirt lengths were about an inch shorter than last season. For day, 15½ inches from the floor, and for evening 16½ inches. Many houses were expected to raise skirts to 17 inches from the floor, a good 2 inches shorter than last year.

Last night, Carven showed day dresses with skirts a half an inch shorter than Balmain's. Carven, who caters to small women, also launched a new line, accentuated in piping or white pique.

SOFT, flattering all worsted jersey is used in this jaunty suit designed by Janet Norwood. Bloused jacket is lined and belted, with criss-cross silk embroidery on the collar and cuffs. Furs May Be Cleaned, Glazed at Home

IF YOU have any old fur pieces around the house and want to be really economical, you can do a remodeling job yourself, according to clothing specialists in the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Bring out the old collars, cuffs, muffs and stray pieces stored away. Small scraps may often be cleaned and trimmed to perk up a last year's frock, suit or hat.

Cleaning furs should be done with corn meal dampened by a dry-cleaning solvent such as carbon tetrachloride. Rub it in with the hands, then shake, brush and air the fur.

Some May Be Wasted

BADLY soiled fur pieces of good quality may be washed if a mild soap is used and the water is not too hot. Rinse and squeeze out as much water as possible, since this tends to harden the pelt. As the pelt dries, work it gently between the hands to keep it flexible. When it is thoroughly dry, shake and brush until the fur is fluffy.

If the fur is faded it can be dyed with hair dye, following directions on the package. Again you must be careful to squeeze out the water and dry it quickly. Never use artificial heat because this dries out the oils in the skin.

Glazing must be done with great care. Brush the fur well and lay it flat. With a damp, not wet, sponge, stroke the fur lightly in the direction of the hair. Don't let water penetrate to the skin. Cover the fur with tissue paper and run a hot iron quickly and carefully over the paper to absorb moisture. Remove the paper and run the iron over again very rapidly in the direction of the fur.

To Cut Odd Pieces

CUTTING fur pieces should be done from the skin side with a razor blade, never scissors, since they clip the hair. In joining pieces, match them so the fur all lies in the same direction. Sew the skins together from the wrong side with a fine needle to prevent making large holes in the pelt. Attach a padding of outing flannel to the pelt with tacking stitches before lining.

We hope it is apparent that great care must be taken in working with fur and suggest that you experiment on a small piece first. Your fur repairman uses more technical methods and since he is experienced and skilled in his craft, it would be wise to let him handle the larger jobs.

Spring Suits Slim and Short

By Peggy Preston

THERE won't be a chance to hide your figure faults under the new spring suits. They're short and snappy and strictly streamlined.

Skirt and jacket lengths have both succumbed to the current notion that brevity is the spice of fashion. Both are on the up and up, and there isn't an inch of excessive fabric in either garment.

Anyone looking for an old, comforting full-skirted suit of "new look" fame will be disappointed. The tucks, gathers, drapes, folds, padding and stiffening that we had to rely on have disappeared. The best you can do is accept a gently gored or pleated version. And even then, there will be little hope of disguising those extra pounds at the hipline or waistline. Shorter jackets will put figure emphasis on the line from waist to knee. So start your exercises early, girls, or you'll never do justice to your Easter outfit.

Skirts Are Slim But Jackets Vary

WHILE the straight, slim skirt holds undisputed sway, jackets vary considerably. They may be tailored in outline, or soft with little dressmaker touches. The latter is apt to be the favorite, since it is the kindest to most women, lending the figure enough softness to be flattering.

You may take your choice from the following jacket styles:

Fitted, with a nipped in waistline and row of buttons down the front; belted with a bloused back; or the Norfolk type, boxy and short, with either a straight or flared back.

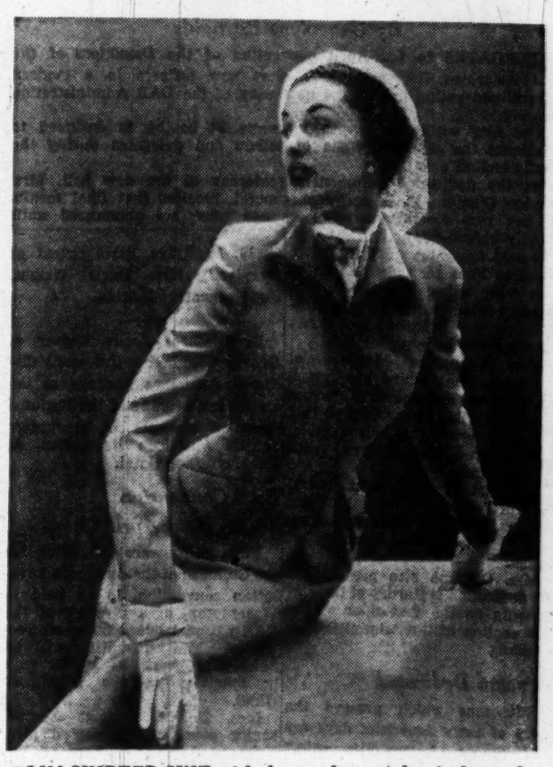
Philip Mangone does this latter type of jacket especially well. This season he shows it in pastel checked or patterned wiry-textured woolens. This designer also likes another attractive vogue of the season—a wool jacket lined with striped taffeta to match the blouse.

Taffeta and Wool Mixed in Suits

LATER in the year when you are considering lighter-weight fabrics for suits, you will find more and more dressmaker detail on the garments.

Adele Simpson stresses the silk suit in her collection as a costume that fits into the lives of most women. She mixes taffeta and sheer wool, putting a silk box jacket and halter blouse over a wool skirt. Others are entirely of taffeta or medium weight faille.

The suit goes on to gain considerable recognition for dinner and evening wear. A jacket may top a strapless dress or a skirt and blouse outfit. In these costumes the fabrics are quite lovely. Included are soft, clinging silk georgette crepe and organza.



SLIM SKIRTED SUIT with dressmaker touches is due to be a leading favorite this spring. This one comes in yarn dyed gray flannel, and in sleek, handsome milateen in navy or dark blue. Available at the F st. and Silver Spring shops of the Joseph R. Harris Co.

Will you give me your advice as to whether a sink top can be successfully recover with formica, nonprofessionally. If so, can it be purchased retail in the Washington Area?
Mrs. G. Perrie Nutwell

Yes, home owners often do the job of covering sink or cabinets with formica themselves. A metal strip is used to bind the formica on around the edge. A number of firms listed under "hardware" carry the formica or will order it for you.

Recently, you had a recipe for oatmeal cookie mix, but no recipe for the cookies. Would you print that, please? If milk is the liquid used, dried skim milk could be included in the mix and then only water added. E. M. K.

Thank you for calling our attention to this. Part of the reader's letter about the oatmeal mix and cookies was inadvertantly omitted. Here is the complete recipe, together with suggestions for use of the mix:

OATMEAL COOKIE MIX

3 cups sifted flour
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon baking powder
2 teaspoons salt
2½ cups sugar
1 cup shortening
3 cups rolled oats (quick cut or old-fashioned, uncooked)

Sift flour, soda, baking powder, salt, and sugar together three times. Cut shortening into sifted dry ingredients until mixture resembles corn meal. Add rolled oats and mix well. Store in covered container at room temperature.

TO MAKE PLAIN COOKIES: Add 1 beaten egg, 1 tablespoon milk, and 1 teaspoon vanilla to 2 cups of the above oatmeal cookie mix. Beat until well-blended. Drop from a teaspoon onto greased baking sheet. Bake in moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) for 12 to 15 minutes.

VARIATIONS: (1) Add ½ cup chopped nutmeats, raisins, coconut, or chocolate chips to prepared batter. Mix as directed above.

(2) Add 1 teaspoon cinnamon and ¼ teaspoon nutmeg to dry mix and blend well. Omit vanilla. Add egg and milk and mix as directed above.

Yes, adding powdered milk to the dry mixture would be perfectly satisfactory and could be used to give extra nutritive value to the mixture.

My sister and I—we share an apartment—have been thinking of having pillows renovated. However, we can't agree on which ones are in need of doing over and which are all right as they are. Are there any standards we might use in deciding? K. K.

Here are some tests to help you tell which pillows need renovating?

1. Shake and plump up a pillow. Hold it out on the palm of your hand. If it remains full and plump, it is in good condition, but if it collapses and sags at either end, it needs renovating.

2. Lay the pillow flat and press down the center with your hand. If it rebounds, there is still life in it. If the depression remains, it needs renovation.

3. Shake the pillow vigorously from one end. If the feather filling settles noticeably at the other end, it shows that the feathers have lost their resiliency, and that perhaps there are broken feathers and dust that weight it down.

4 Pound the pillow hard. If dust flies or if you feel stiff, ragged quills through the ticking, the pillow needs renovation.

Melt chocolate and shortening together over hot water. Mix and sift flour, baking powder, and salt. Beat eggs. Gradually beat in sugar. Add vanilla and melted chocolate and shortening. Stir in flour and chopped walnuts. Spread in greased 9-inch pie pan. Bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees Fahrenheit, 25 minutes. Remove from pan. Cool. Frost with coffee walnut frosting. Garnish with whole walnut meats.

Acalotti Got Concurrent Term Promise

Attilio Acalotti, convicted gambler, was promised by Judge Alexander Holtzoff before his trial that if convicted his sentence would run concurrently with the one he was serving already for threatening a Government witness.

Judge Holtzoff made the promise to Acalotti's counsel, Charles E. Ford, on the first day of the trial in which Acalotti was found guilty.

Acalotti was sentenced to serve from 8 to 24 months to run concurrently with an identical sentence, imposed by Judge Holtzoff three weeks earlier, for threatening his former sweetheart, Bernice Franklin, key witness before the special gambling grand jury.

The promise was made January 9. Ford had asked Judge Holtzoff himself, because the judge had presided over the threats trial, and had described Acalotti as an "evil influence."

Ford withdrew his request at a bench conference during preliminary arguments, when Judge Holtzoff said to him:

"As a matter of fact, your client has nothing to lose because, if convicted, he would get a concurrent sentence."

Counsel for William "Snags" Lewis, alleged head of a 14-million-dollar-a-year gambling syndicate, and Frank Billeci, former circulation man for the Washington Times-Herald, convicted with Acalotti, then agreed to let the case be tried before Judge Holtzoff.

Lewis was sentenced to serve from 10 to 30 months, and Billeci from eight to 27.

Judge Holtzoff denied both of them bond, because of evidence that efforts had been made to tamper with the jury that convicted them, and because Government counsel told him there was reliable evidence that both men had "continued their illicit activities since their arrest."

The FBI yesterday continued its investigation of jury tampering charges, and questioned one alternate juror. The seven men and five women on the jury already have been quizzed.

Three jurors have reported receiving threatening telephone calls, and one woman juror said she got an offer of $300 for a verdict of not guilty.

The retrial of Lewis and 13 others on gambling conspiracy charges, scheduled to start today, will be postponed at the bidding of Judge Holtzoff.

The judge told Government authorities yesterday that he did not want to clutter the District Court calendar with time-consuming gambling trials.

The Lewis-Acalotti-Billeci gambling trial lasted 18 days.

Intended postponement of the conspiracy trial gave rise to reports that United States Attorney George Morris Fay would allow the 14 men to be extradited to Prince Georges County where they await trial on charges of operating a numbers lottery.

Fay refused yesterday to comment on that possibility yesterday. Extradition hearings on the 14 are scheduled for February 27.

Building Suit Claims 3 GI's Overcharged

A Silver Spring builder, James L. Kane, was sued by the Government in Baltimore Federal Court yesterday on charges that he violated priority regulations and overcharged three veterans a total of $11,648 for new houses.

Kane, of 8609 Mayfair pl., Silver Spring, said yesterday he knew nothing of the suit and could not comment.

In its suit, the Government charged that Kane violated priority rules established for building materials soon after the war by the Civilian Production Administration.

He was also accused of overcharging for three homes in violation of the Veterans Emergency Housing Act. The Government charged that he deviated from plans and specifications on which the homes were sold.

The suit asked that Kane make refunds to Grant Olson for a home on Homestead dr., Mary R. Shea for a home on Brewster ct., and R. K. Quinn for a house on Brunette ave., all in the Silver Spring area.

Mrs. Olson said she and her husband sold their Homestead dr. house. She said she was not aware that the suit was filed. The couple now live at 8522 Garland ave., Takoma Park.

Dewey's Budget Cut $77 Millions; Taxes Unchanged

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 1 (AP).—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey submitted to New York's legislature today a State budget of $861,722,632, proposing a record $77,600,000 cut in spending but no change in taxes.

The proposed 1950-51 budget still ranked as the second highest in the State history. It is topped only by the all-time high of $939,287,644 for the 1949-50 fiscal year, ending March 31.

The State's vast public works program bears the brunt of the cut. But Dewey indicated he may modify his pay-as-you-go fiscal policy by financing highway construction through bond issues.

It was the first time since 1944 that Dewey had cut appropriations below those of a preceding year.

HOTTEST IN 79 YEARS—Charts show the daily high and low temperatures last month. If you thought January was hot, you were correct. Woodlawn Citizens Reaffirm Stand for One-Family Homes

Members of the Woodlawn Citizens Association last night reaffirmed, 34 to 3, their opposition to the construction of anything but single family detached dwellings in their area.

T. Hammond Welsh, jr., attorney for Edwin B. Feldman, Washington builder, presented a covenant which would prohibit construction of anything other than one-family detached or semi-detached single family dwellings not to exceed two stories in height on a 22-acre tract adjacent to Woodlawn.

The covenant was offered in an effort to overcome the opposition to a petition for R-35 zoning, which would permit semidetached or two-family dwellings on the land.

Decision on the rezoning was postponed to January 24 by the Prince Georges County commissioners to permit presentation of the covenant to the citizens. Another hearing will be held Tuesday in Upper Marlboro.

A resolution which would have kept Welsh from speaking was abandoned, and he was permitted to present his covenant at the meeting, held in the Landover Hills Elementary School.

Washington Highlands

The education committee of the Washington Highlands Citizens Association last night announced its plans for a program for teen-age girls to be held February 7, 10 and 14 at the Fort Greble playground. Mrs. Frank Smallwood made the announcement at a meeting in the Patterson School.

Businessmen's Group

The Federation of Businessmen's Associations last night adopted a resolution "condemning the District Commissioners for delaying the completion of the Dupont Circle underpass."

The board of directors noted that "as a result of the long delay, 45 businessmen have been very seriously affected financially, seven have gone into bankruptcy, and seven more are ready to go."

Crestwood

The Crestwood Citizens Association, at a meeting in Roosevelt High School, last night went on record in favor of repeal of the District personal property tax.

The 55 persons present also saw a film on birds, with a musical background presented by Mr. and Mrs. Don Sutherland. After the meeting, a social hour was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Walsh, 1747 Shepherd st. nw.

Truman Waltz Is Army Band Concert Hit

"Independence Waltz," dedicated to President Truman, was warmly applauded last night in Interdepartmental Auditorium at a premiere performance by its composers, the duo-pianists Arthur Whittemore and Jack Lowe.

The Army Band, with which the pianists appeared in cooperation with the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission, also rose in tribute to the composition.

In response to insistent applause, the composers played the waltz a second time, and followed it with encores.

Two thousand persons attended the concert third of the Freedom Sings series featuring American concert artists with the Army Band, led by Capt. Hugh J. Curry, and the band chorus, conducted by First Lieut. Samuel Loboda.

William J. Fleming, president of the New Jersey State Society, spoke briefly. The program was dedicated to New Jersey, third State to ratify the Constitution.

Flagstad, Traubel To Sing in '50-'51 At Metropolitan

New York, Feb. 1 (NYHT).—Kirsten Flagstad and Helen Traubel will share honors as leading Wagnerian sopranos of the Metropolitan Opera Association next season, Rudolf Bing, general manager announced today.

Bing made no such promise in the case of Lauritz Melchior, tenor, who has accused the Metropolitan's director of ignoring him in next season's plans.

Bing also announced that the 1950-51 season would open November 6, that it would run 20 weeks—the longest since 1943-44.

Regarding Miss Traubel, who said on Saturday that she was being ignored, Bing said:

"I am particularly happy to announce that I have offered Mme. Traubel, and she has accepted, to appear in Tristan und Isolde," "Rosenkavalier,' and in one 'ring' cycle out of two."

Regarding Miss Flagstad, Bing said:

"A great artist who will return to the Metropolitan after some years of absence is Kirsten Flagstad. Mme. Flagstad will sing Isolde, one 'ring' cycle out of two, and Beethoven's 'Fidelio.'"

Joseph W. Rogers, 41, of 1107 N. Edgewood st., Arlington, was fined $200 and sentenced to 60 days in jail yesterday on conviction of hit and run and drunken driving charges by Arlington County Court Judge Hugh Reid.

Rogers admitted having four drinks before he was involved in an accident at N. Veitch st. and Wilson blvd. January 20.

In another case, Raymond F. Martin, 23, of 110 Stuart dr., Falls Church, was given a $100 fine and 30 days' suspended sentence by Judge Reid on a drunken driving charge. He was arrested January 22 after an accident.

Postlude

Memorable Concert Led By Ansermet

By Paul Hume

Ernest Ansermet made the 1500th concert of the National Symphony Orchestra one of the greatest musical events in Washington history.

The noted Swiss conductor, one of the few towering conductors in the world today, led the orchestra in three pieces: Beethoven's Eroica Symphony, a suite by Gabriel Faure, and a suite from Igor Stravinsky's ballet, Petrouchka.

No man living has a finer grasp of every shade of meaning in the fabled Russian ballet—no one surpasses his reading of its turbulent lines. Ansermet, now appearing as guest conductor of the NBC Symphony in New York, drew a constant stream of brilliant sonority and vigorous rhythms from the National Symphony.

Brasses shone and woodwinds outdid themselves as the tumultuous music program progressed. It is one of music's immortal works, and we are blessed that Ansermet has recorded it on more than one occasion. The phonograph has no higher purpose than to make permanent such achievements as Ansermet's in Petrouchka.

To mention the wind instruments in the orchestra might seem to slight the strings. But they sounded their most polished and sumptuous all evening. In the slow movement of the symphony, and in every moment of Faure's nostalgic score, they sang with pure tone and rich quality. Tomasow handled the solo lines in Petrouchka with the same clarity and fire as the other solo voices throughout the ballet music.

The entire percussion section was equally able in complex problems falling to it.

It was a tremendous evening, begun in great fashion with a broad reading of the symphony. Ansermet moves tempos in the Eroica with a free hand but never undue liberty. The slow movement found unwonted power and nobility as he held it back. Nor did the scherzo rush headlong as it sometimes does.

The trumpets, toward the close of the slow movement, were thrilling, and even more so at the coda of the last movement. It was a relaxed, controlled reading of incredible breadth. Ansermet has no counterpart among conductors in this country today. He is an enrichment to the entire musical world. His contribution to the National Symphony long will be remembered.

Next week: Mitchell with a Bach suite, and the Strauss Don Quixote.

MARYLAND

500 ACRES, located in the zone of the new South Capitol Street Bridge. This bridge was opened for traffic on January 14th, and has a capacity of 50,000 motor vehicles a day. This ground is located 4 squares beyond the District line in Maryland. This bridge brings this property within about 12 minutes of the heart of Washington; 95 acres of this land can be used for cemetery. Cemetery land will retail for about $200,000 an acre. The remainder of this ground is suitable for shopping centers, apartments, and low-cost housing.
To give you an idea of what ground is worth in the zone of the Virginia end of the bridges, it is around $500,000 commercial property by the acre. One of the vice presidents of the Riggs National Bank bought 30 acres for $30,000 in the zone of the Memorial Bridge and sold it to the Government for $1,800,000. A farmer bought a farm over there for $3,000 and gave it to his son and he sold it for $40,000 and now it is worth $2,000,000. If you will go to the District line on the new 4-lane South Capitol st. you will see about 4 blocks away a big woods, that is the beginnings of this property and if you look to the right and left you will see about $100,000,000 worth of housing and apartment buildings right up to and adjoining my property.

Budget Gives County Schools $4.2 Million

By Lane Budget

$13.7 Million Allotted to Maryland U.

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 1—Schools in Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties will get a $4,212,044 slice of State funds under the budget submitted to the Maryland General Assembly by Governor Lane.

The Governor's program calls for spending $31,697,810 for operating the public school system.

Of this total, Montgomery County will get $1,217,118 and Prince Georges County will receive $2,894,926.

The allocations for the two school programs are partially based on expected increases in school enrollments. In the State as a whole, School Superintendent Thomas G. Pullen said today an increase of from 20,000 to 23,000 new pupils is expected.

Of the funds the two nearby counties will receive, Montgomery will get $54,829 for an incentive building program, and Prince Georges will receive $192,989.

Other school sums included in the budget for the two counties are: Montgomery, $369,600 in aid per classroom unit; $489,920 in aid per pupil; $229,836 in equalization aid and $72,933 in part payment of salary.

In Prince Georges County, comparable figures are: $420,400 in aid per classroom unit; $617,980 in aid per pupil; $1,577,348 in equalization aid and $86,209 in part payment of salary.

Four Washington area hospitals will participate in this program. Here are the amounts requested for the program, and the amounts included in Lane's budget:

Montgomery County General Hospital, $16,320, of which $12,083 was allowed; Prince Georges General Hospital, $25,000, of which $18,509 was allowed; Suburban Hospital in Bethesda, $25,407, of which $18,811 was allowed; Washington Sanitarium and Hospital, Takoma Park, $4484, of which $3320 was allowed.

Annapolis, Feb. 1 (AP).—Governor Lane's new budget allots $13,770,773 to the University of Maryland for the fiscal year starting July 1.

Of this amount $5,711,585 would come from state funds and $8,059,188 would be collected by the university in student fees and from other special sources.

In addition, the university expects to receive $638,180 in federal funds to bring its total working budget to $14,408,953.

The overall 1951 fiscal year budget, on its face, is $172,613 less than the current working budget, which includes $8,179,301 in special funds, $5,766,585 in general funds and $635,679 from federal sources.

The university does not expect to get as large a freshman class as usual next September because of the shiftover this year from an 11-year to a 12-year school system in most of the counties.

Most of the $120,000 drop in special funds was accounted for because of this.

Jaycees to Honor 'Outstanding Boss'

The Washington Junior Chamber of Commerce will make its annual "outstanding boss" award today at its weekly luncheon at the Burlington Hotel at 12:30 p. m.

Dean Elmer Kayser, of George Washington University, will be principal speaker. The group will also honor Army chaplains as part of its observation of "Four Chaplains' Memorial Day" Friday.

'This I Remember'

'Big Man, Little Dog (Fala)—or—Little Man, Big Dog?'

This is another installment of the serialization of "This I Remember," the nonfiction best seller in which Eleanor Roosevelt tells the story of Franklin D. Roosevelt's career from 1924 to his death in 1945. Succeeding installments will be printed in The Washington Post through February 4.

By Eleanor Roosevelt

ON July 7, while I was in Hyde Park, General de Gaulle lunched with Franklin in the White House. We wondered whether this visit would alter my husband's feeling about the general. Their meeting, however, though pleasant, was evidently very formal, and I saw no difference in Franklin's attitude.

From July 15 to August 17 Franklin was away on a trip to the Pacific. He had been in the European area a great deal; now he wanted to establish personal contact with the officers in the Pacific area and review with them their plans for the war. Consequently a meeting was arranged in Hawaii. From there he flew to Alaska and the Aleutians. It was this trip that gave rise to the extraordinary tale that Fala had been left behind on one of the islands and a destroyer was sent back for him. I have no idea where this story started, and neither had my husband, though we supposed it was some bright young man in Republican headquarters. There was no incident during the trip which could have given rise to any such tale.

While Franklin was gone Anna and her husband stayed at the White House. Her children were with me at Hyde Park, where I spent most of the summer. As usual we had a good many guests.

We were all saddened by the death of Marguerite LeHand on August 2. I was glad I had been able to see her not very long before, when I went to Boston to visit the Chelsea Naval Hospital.

On September 10 we left for Quebec for the second war conference. Mrs. Churchill was to be there with her husband, and Franklin had asked me to go. At first Mr. and Mrs. Hull had planned to attend, but then Secretary Hull decided he was not well enough. Later Franklin asked Henry Morgenthau, jr., to come up, for they were discussing postwar questions. This, of course, would not have been necessary had Secretary Hull been with us. According to Henry L. Stimson's book, On Active Service in Peace and War, Mr. Hull, Mr. Stimson and Mr. Morgenthau had been asked by the President to agree upon some plan for the postwar treatment of Germany, and each put forward his own ideas.

Feared German Power

FRANKLIN was very anxious that it should be made impossible for Germany again to start a war. I heard him discuss many possibilities, even the question of dividing Germany again the way it had been before the different principalities were unified. He realized that the industrial power of Germany lay in control of the Ruhr, since the kind of coal needed for the making of certain types of steel comes from there. I am sure Franklin carefully considered international control of the Ruhr, but whether or not he came to any final decision I do not remember ever hearing him say.

He undoubtedly discussed with Henry Morgenthau all of his ideas, including the possibility of reducing Germany to a country more dependent upon agriculture than in the past, allowing her only such industry as was essential for a self-supporting state but making sure that the other countries of Europe would not again be largely dependent on Germany for their economy and prosperity. The plan presented by Secretary Morgenthau was okayed by both my husband and Mr. Churchill.

Henry Morgenthau himself tells the story of his last interview with my husband the night before Franklin died. He left him with the firm conviction that Franklin still was determined "not to allow" any sentimental considerations to modify the conditions necessary to prevent Germany and the German people from becoming aggressors again. Henry Morgenthau felt these views were embodied in the Potsdam Agreement. The trouble which has arisen since was not because of that agreement, but because of the lack of further agreement. A careful analysis of much that has happened since would show, I think, that Mr. Churchill probably always favored less harshness to Germany, and, as fear of Russia increased, this attitude naturally became intensified.

While we were at this conference Mr. Churchill showed us a scale model of a D-Day landing harbor so my husband could see exactly how this extraordinary feat had been performed. We were all greatly interested, and Franklin doubly so. He insisted that it be taken down to Washington and displayed in the War Department where all the officers could see it.

SINCE Daniel Tobin was an old and warm Democratic supporter, Franklin opened the campaign by speaking at the Teamsters' Union dinner in Washington. It was at this dinner, I always felt, that Franklin really laid the foundation for Mr. Dewey's defeat. Scathingly he described Fala's indignation over the Republican accusation that he had been left behind on an island and retrieved only at the cost of untold sums of taxpayers' money. Fala, with his austere but distinctly Scottish personality, gave my husband great joy. In the campaign he would chuckle and say: "I think people prefer the big man with the little dog to the little man with the big dog."

Shortly after my birthday I made one of my regular trips to the hospital to donate blood to the Red Cross. The young lady at the desk was terribly embarrassed because I had passed the 60-mark in years and no one over 60 was allowed to give blood. I was slightly indignant. I could not see how in a few weeks my blood could have changed. I realized, however, that there had to be some definite limit set. The incident brought home to me the dreary fact that I had really entered old age on October 11, 1944.

At the end of the campaign Franklin and I drove through miles of New York City streets in one of the worst rain storms I ever remember. We did everything as planned, but in between times we stopped in a city garage so Franklin could change into dry clothes. Riding in an open car in that downpour he was drenched to the skin.

We ended up at the apartment which I had been trying to get Franklin to look at ever since we sold the 65th street houses. He had told me to get an apartment in New York City in which we could stay occasionally after we left Washington, specifying that it should be a place where he could work in peace and quiet, with no steps anywhere. I asked him if he cared in what part of town he lived, and he said he had absolutely no preference. He had every intention of spending the rest of his life after leaving the White House at Hyde Park and Warm Springs but realized that since he planned to do some magazine work he must have some little place in which to stay in New York City. When I happened to find an apartment on Washington Square with no steps and with two rooms connected by a bathroom, which could be shut off from the rest of the apartment, I decided it was the ideal spot. But until that rainy day Franklin had not been in the city and I had not been given a chance to show it to him, even after I had furnished it and put it all in order. He now said he liked it very much.

Enthusiastic Crowds

I WAS REALLY worried about Franklin that day, but instead of being completely exhausted he was exhilarated after he had a chance to change his clothes and get a little rest. The crowds were enthusiastic and welcoming, and the contact with them was good for him. People seemed not to mind at all standing in the rain as long as they could get a glimpse of him as he waved in passing. That must give anyone a very warm feeling. People love you when they believe you have done something really worthwhile for them, and there was no question but that the people of New York City had been telling him that day how much they cared. Men, women and children stood for hours, and as far as I could tell it made no difference that the sun was not shining.

Dr. McIntire was worried about the campaign, but I had told him early in the autumn I thought Franklin drew strength from contact with the people. The day of our visit to New York City I felt I was right and that Franklin was better than he had been at the beginning of the campaign.

That night, November 4, Franklin spoke at the Foreign Policy Association dinner. I heard afterward that some people thought he looked very ill that night, but I was not surprised, for he was extremely tired. We then went to Hyde Park for the election returns. On election night when the returns showed his reelection was assured Franklin went out on the porch as usual to welcome our neighbors when they came down to greet and congratulate him.

Franklin went to Warm Springs for Thanksgiving and spent nearly three weeks there. I was always glad when he was able to go, because he enjoyed so much the contact with the patients—especially the youngsters. I think he felt a great satisfaction in knowing that he had been able to contribute so much to the recovery of people who suffered as he had suffered.

This year we again spent Christmas at Hyde Park. Soon afterward Franklin began to plan for his trip to Yalta. I remember that he was so busy it was well into January before he had time to open his Christmas present! He would not let any of us do it for him, so little by little as he had a few minutes before dinner he had the pleasure of opening his gifts, every one of which he enjoyed.

Determined to Go

AFTER the inauguration it was clearer every day that Franklin was far from well, but he was determined to go to Yalta, and when he made up his mind to do something he very rarely abandoned the idea. And he did enjoy these trips, particularly when he could go most of the way by battleship. We discussed whether I should go, and he said: "If you go they will all feel they have to make a great fuss, but if Anna goes it will be simpler. Averell Harriman will bring his daughter down from Moscow." Thus it was decided. Anna's husband was agreeable, saying it seemed only fair that she should see one of these conferences, even though he would be left in Washington to look after little Johnny.

Franklin had high hopes for this conference. He was confident that this time he could make real progress in creating a favorable personal relationship between himself and Marshal Stalin. He talked a good deal about the importance of this in the days of peace to come. He had always realized that the problems which would arise after a declaration of peace would be even more difficult than those arising during the war. He also told me that he intended, if possible, to see some of the Arabs and try to find a peaceful solution to the Palestine situation.

While she and her father were gone, Anna kept us posted about Franklin's health and what was happening on the trip. I thought that in all probability the trip would prove beneficial to Franklin, since he seemed to feel well pleased with the results of his talks with Mr. Stalin. On the return trip, however, Gen. Edwin Watson, who wanted above all else to go on the trip, had a stroke, and before they were out of the Mediterranean he died. Harry Hopkins was also very ill on this trip and debarked at Marrakech for a holiday and rest. All in all, dark clouds seemed to be settling over the ship and, frankly, I was worried. However, when Franklin landed he seemed better and, in spite of his sorrow, retained some of the pleasant excitement incidental to getting home in describing the trip. This he always enjoyed.

Super Snooper's Spies Are Everywhere

In the question period following a speech I made the other day, somebody asked for my opinion of some derogatory remarks that had been made about Drew Pearson.

I told my select audience (no more than two dozen people ever show up) that I thought Pearson had done a tremendous amount of good by exposing blackguards who needed exposing.

Surprisingly enough, Pearson heard about the incident, and called up to express his thanks.

When I told the lady of our house about the call, I thought she'd be as impressed as I was with Pearson's thoughtfulness. Instead, her comment was:

"Doesn't anything happen in this town without that guy finding out about it?"

ADDED ATTRACTION

In front of Seat 4, Row A, Section 41 at Uline Arena, there's a wayward steam pipe from which water drips at intervals.

Unfortunately, it's very hot water, the kind one might expect to issue from a steam pipe.

Even more unfortunately, some of it dripped on the head of a patron at the Ice Capades the other day.

As luck would have it, the patron was bald. The yowl he let loose when the hot water hit could have been heard a block away.

I got the distinct impression that he did not take very kindly to the idea of a hot bath at an ice show.

GIVE-AWAYS

"Four-month-old gray tiger kitten; housebroken, affectionate." (Executive 2420, extension 660, 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.)

"Two healthy, gentle yellow cats; we're moving to California." (Hobart 7033.)

"One-year-old Belgian shepherd; good watchdog, used to children." (Wisconsin 8583.)

LEGAL LEVITY

While they're doing their stuff in public, lawyers are usually very grave. But beneath the blue serge and horn-rimmed glasses there often lies a rich vein of humor.

Attorney Paul M. Segal of 816 Connecticut ave. nw., for example, recently filed a petition with the Federal Communications Commission, asking postponement of a hearing scheduled for February 14. The petition read:

"The oldest son (Paul F.) of Paul M. Segal is to be married at Denver, Colo., on February 19 and Paul M. Segal has entered into extensive commitments with regard to the festivities customarily preceding such an event. The violation of any of those commitments would result in domestic and community distress and embarrassments."

Commission Chairman Wayne Coy is a Hoosier storyteller of some renown himself. But not while discharging his official duties.

The FCC solemnly weighed Attorney Segal's solemn petition, just as solemnly granted it. With nary a smile.

ADD SIGNS

M. O. Coleman of 520 7th st. se. ponders the sign at the Avondale shopping center which reads "Two Hours Parking Limit For Store Customers Only," and muses:

"Does that mean that motorists who are not customers may park all day?"

PERSONAL NOTES

Mrs. De C.: Your contribution has been forwarded to the old woman whose home burned down. Thank you.

Lois E. Broadus, 302 M st. nw.: Getting a thank-you note from a publicity chairman is a pleasant surprise. Thanks, and I'm glad to hear that the East Central Civic Association's party for the kids was a big success.

Dorothy Planten, 6000 41st. ave., Hyattsville, Md.: Do you really think the pace of office workers is slower in Washington than elsewhere? I'll bet you could start a peach of an argument with that one.

VAGRANT THOUGHT

The trouble with working for a living is that by the time a fellow puts in 8 hours at the office, the day is practically gone.

Frankfurter's Men Make A Mighty List

By Drew Pearson

Ever since the Acheson statement supporting Alger Hiss, congressional corridors have been teeming with comment regarding the so-called Frankfurter "red-hots" and the Supreme Court justice who has put Hiss and Acheson plus so many other men in key spots in Washington.

Frankfurter

This columnist has no reason to love Felix Frankfurter. Not only have his Supreme Court opinions been a disappointment, but twice in private Supreme Court discussions, Frankfurter has berated this writer, and on one occasion demanded that he be jailed for criticizing certain Supreme Court moves.

When Chief Justice Vinson and a majority of the court ruled against any criminal action, Frankfurter even went over their heads, through a friend, to the Justice Department and demanded prosecution.

However, in the spirit of fairness—which Justice Frankfurter has not always shown to others—I should like to review the whole list of so-called "red-hots" whom the Supreme Court justice has brought to Washington.

During the Hoover Administration he was solely responsible for the appointment of Joseph P. Cotton as Undersecretary of State. Cotton, though, a Wall Street lawyer, turned out to be one of the finest of State Department officials in two decades. Frankfurter was also responsible for picking James Grafton Rogers, then dean of the Colorado Law School, as Assistant Secretary of State in the Hoover Administration. Rogers was a Republican and an A-1 choice.

It was during the Hoover Administration also that the famed Tom Corcoran, later brain truster to FDR, got started in Government. Corcoran had been sent to Washington by Frankfurter as Justice Holmes' law clerk, and then joined the RFC under Eugene Meyer, a Republican. And though some people, including Frankfurter, soured on Corcoran, his final impact on history, in this writer's opinion, will be on the plus side.

Thomas D. Thacher, able and conservative, who served as Hoover's Solicitor General, was also a good friend of Frankfurter's and owed his appointment partly to the controversial gentleman from Harvard.

Frankfurter was also 100 percent responsible for the appointment of one of our finest elder statesmen, Henry L. Stimson, as FDR's Secretary of War.

Robert Patterson, Stimson's Undersecretary of War, and later Secretary of War, was also a 100 percent Frankfurter appointee.

Here is a partial list of the other so-called "hot-dogs," some good, some bad, some indifferent, but on the whole an amazing and constructive contribution for one man to have placed in Government office.

Francis Biddle—former Attorney General, former Circuit Court judge, Solicitor General, and presiding judge of the Nazi war crimes tribunal.

David Lilienthal—Former head of the Tennessee Valley Authority, now chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Wiley Rutledge—Now deceased and a great justice of the Supreme Court, was never a Frankfurter protege, but Frankfurter helped pick him for the court.

John J. McCloy—A very able Assistant Secretary of War, head of the World Bank and High Commissioner to Germany.

James M. Landis—Former head of the Securities and Exchange Commission, director of civilian defense, and head of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Ben Cohen—One of the Roosevelt brain trusters, later counselor of the State Department, now a delegate to the United Nations.

Lloyd Garrison—Dean of the University of Wisconsin Law School and chairman of the War Labor Board.

James Rowe—The No. 2 man in the Justice Department for many years and now one of Herbert Hoover's aides in Government reorganization.

David Niles—An assistant to FDR and the only Roosevelt man remaining in the Truman entourage.
